Robert Chapman, a foundryman, was hit with a piece of iron in the face Tuesday, making a severe wound just over the eye.

It is reported that one of the young ladies of the place, while on her way home one evening last week, was followed by some one for a considerable distance. Such parties will be severely dealt with if caught.

WALES.

Isaiah Hiscock has been to Norwich, Ct., on business this week.

C. Moore is preparing to move into the new meat market in Shaw's block.

Rev. H. P. Smith has been quite sick this week, being confined to his bed two days.

E. Shaw has gone to Raleigh, N. C., to attend the funeral of Dr. H. M. Tupper of the Shaw University.

William Flynt has moved into George W. Dimmick's Pratt place, recently purchased of Rev. H. P. Smith.

The mills are running, but will move cautiously until it is known how much the tariff is to be tinkered.

Mrs. Kline will not go to Germany, as anticipated, on account of her health. It is hinted that quite a snug sum of money has fallen to her.

Joseph Lucy is trapping rabbits and muskrats with good success, while Mr. Maynard is having good luck with 'coons. He hangs out a new skin nearly every day.

Mrs. J. E. Hubbard and children, who have been spending the summer with relatives in Stafford, Ct., Marlboro, Mass., and Wales, have returned to their home in Blue Rapids, Kan. Mrs. Hubbard's mother, Mrs. A. M. Cundall, accompanied them.

BELCHERTOWN.

Clinton W. Randall has gone West, where he will spend the winter.

The grammar and primary schools closed Tuesday, and the high school will close today.

E. J. Griggs post of the Grand Army is holding its meetings in Masonic Hall for the present.

George Gillett, who has been a resident of Belchertown for the past 45 years, died at his home Wednesday at the age of 77. He was a native of Granby, Ct. A widow and one daughter survive him.

L. W. Dillon was before Judge Strickland yesterday for selling liquor to minors and for illegal selling on cattle show day. He was acquitted on the former charge and convicted on the latter, but appealed.

Mrs. Charles Foster, 70, a former resident of Belchertown, died at her home in South Amherst Tuesday morning. She leaves a husband and two children, Charles Hunter and Mrs. William Chamberlain of Amherst.

The Farmers' and Mechanics' Club elected these officers Wednesday evening: President, George L. Kent; vice president, L. W. Dillon; secretary, John Overing; treasurer, W. E. Bridgman; directors, George Davis, Leonard Fosket, Wilson Hamilton, Henry Dunbar, Oliver Hyde.

A resident who a few weeks ago contemplated matrimony, having secured his license and engaged the clergyman, found when he went for his bride that she was gone, another man having persuaded her that to work for wages was more profitable than to marry. After mourning her loss for a few weeks, he has been made happy by her coming to the conclusion that she thought more of him than of money, and the marriage was consummated one evening last week.

WARREN.

Rev. D. O. Clark and family will spend the winter in Worcester.

Mrs. J. W. Hastings is spending a few days with her son in Boston.

...now
...ne deepest to that old
...t of mine.

...A face of lily beauty and a form of airy grace
Floats out of my tobacco as the genius from the vase;
And I thrill beneath the glances of a pair of azure eyes
As glowing as the summer and as tender as the skies.

I can see the pink sunbonnet and the little checkered dress
She wore when first I kissed her, and she answered the caress
With the written declaration that, "as surely as the vine Grew 'round the stump, she loved me," that old sweetheart of mine.

And again I feel the pressure of her slender little hand
As we used to talk together of the future we had planned—
When I should be a poet, and with nothing else to do
But to write the tender verses that she set the music to.

When we should live together in a cosy little cot
Hid in a nest of roses in a tiny garden spot;
Where the vines were ever fruitful and the weather ever fine,
And the birds were ever singing for that old sweetheart of mine.

When I should be her lover forever and a day,
And she my faithful sweetheart till the golden hair was gray;
And we should be so happy that when either's lips were dumb
They should not smile in heaven till the other's kiss had come.

But, ah, my dream is broken by a step upon the stair,
And the door is softly opened, and my wife is standing there;
Yet with eagerness and rapture all my visions I resign
To meet the living presence of that old sweetheart of mine.

The Human Electrical Forces!

How They Control the Organs of the Body.

The electrical force of the human body, as the nerve fluid may be termed, is an especially attractive department of science, as it exerts so marked an influence on the health of the organs of the body. Nerve force is produced by the brain and conveyed by means of the nerves to the various organs of the body, thus supplying the latter with the vitality necessary to insure their health. The pneumogastric nerve, as shown here, may be said to be the most important of the entire nerve system, as it supplies the heart, lungs, stomach, bowels, etc., with the nerve force necessary to keep them active and healthy. As will be seen by the cut the long nerve descending from the base of the brain and terminating in the bowels is the pneumogastric, while the numerous little branches supply the heart, lungs and stomach with necessary vitality. When the brain becomes in any way disordered by irritability or exhaustion, the nerve force which it supplies is lessened, and the organs receiving the diminished supply are consequently weakened.

Physicians generally fail to recognize the importance of this fact, but treat the organ itself instead of the cause of the trouble. The noted specialist, Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., has given the greater part of his life to the study of this subject, and the principal discoveries concerning it are due to his efforts.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, the unrivaled brain and nerve food, is prepared on the principle that all nervous and many other difficulties originate from disorders of the nerve centers. Its wonderful success in curing these disorders is testified to by thousands in every part of the land.

Restorative Nervine cures sleeplessness, nervous prostration, dizziness, hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs. It is sold on a positive guarantee by all druggists, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

...TTY STORY.

...d, Too, in a Most En...ertaining Manner.

...nteresting Bit of History of a Lovely Family.

Strongest Lights and Shadows of Our Home Life.

Mrs. Pauline N. Blakewell, of 740 Jefferson Avenue, Detroit, Mich., says: "Three years ago I found myself bordering on nervous prostration. I could neither eat nor sleep. I was under the care and treatment of eminent physicians, but all to no avail.

Happening to have my attention called to the wonderful restorative effects of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, I decided to give it a trial. By the time the first bottle was gone I felt better and was satisfied that it was doing me good. When I had completed the third bottle I felt entirely cured. My appetite was now good and I could lie down and sleep soundly, something I had not been able to do in years. I can conscientiously recommend the use of this great strengthening medicine to all similarly afflicted as myself.

"A year ago my little daughter was taken suddenly and seriously ill with what physicians pronounced spinal meningitis. After their remedies had failed to cure her, I commenced giving her Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and in less than two weeks from the time of taking the first dose she was on her feet running around, and in a little while was as well as ever. I have never used any medicine with such marked success as I have found in Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy."

MRS. BLAKEWELL'S LITTLE CHILD.

Everybody says the same thing, and from the unanimity of opinion of the doctors and the people, we are assured that this great and widely known remedy is just what our sick and suffering citizens require to restore them to health. All the doctors say that it does cure, and all sufferers from nervousness, weakness, poor blood, debility, stomach, kidney or liver troubles should give it an immediate trial. It is purely vegetable and harmless. Take it yourself and give it to your children. It will cure you.

It is endorsed by physicians because it is the discovery and prescription of the famous Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. The doctor can be consulted free, personally or by letter.

ONLY A BILLIARD BALL.

The globe of ivory which is knocked about a table in a game of billiards costs, if of good quality, at least £2. This represents its cost in money. There is, however, a far more important and formidable element in the price which has been paid for it. The billiard ball of pure ivory represents, as it lies white and glistening upon the cloth, an expenditure of human lifeblood as well as of money.

Elephants' tusks are brought down to the African coasts by caravans, generally in charge of Arabs, which have been trading in the interior. Very often they have picked up slaves as well as ivory. But this phase of the matter may be left out of the account. It is estimated that every large caravan bringing ivory to the coast has cost more than 160 human lives through fights and murders in the course of the expedition Thirty more men are likely to have succumbed to fevers or other diseases and the fatigues of the march. The hunting of the elephants and the capture of the ivory are very likely to have caused the death of ten men altogether. Such casualties are the rule of elephant hunting rather than the exception. An average tusk does not furnish more than enough material for two good billiard balls. Of course the remainder of the ivory in each tusk is made use of in other ways; a perfect cut billiard ball requires special quality, or so-called "nerve," which is found only in one part of the tusk. The chances are that a billiard ball of the first quality has cost at least one human life; and there is not one such ball which may not truly be said not to be stained with men's blood. They can hardly be considered, therefore, a cheerful accompaniment to a sensitive person's diversions. —The Million.

The other day, making a short trip by rail, the Listener had as a fellow-traveler a commercial gentleman who was plainly of the Hebrew race. The Listener is not making a gratuitous reference to this fact; his fellow-traveler was creditably proud of his race, referring to it two or three times in the course of a rather long conversation, and taking as a personal compliment the good things which the Listener was able conversationally to say about the accomplishments and achievements of the Jewish nation. The Listener spoke of the trading talent of the Jews; he referred to the great position which they have gained in the financial world of Europe; of their prominence not only in banking operations, but in the ownership of great journals, and so forth, "and now," said he, "this trading talent is bringing them to the front in America as well as in Europe, and gaining for them an ascendency, at least in certain branches of trade, from which nothing will ever displace them."

"Dey are coming to de vront," said the Listener's fellow-traveler, "most zairtainly; but vy do you speak of deir drading talent all de time?"

"But don't you regard it as a talent?"

"A dalent? No! It is a chenius. I vill dell you what is de difference, in drade, between dalent and chenius. Ven one goes into a man's shtore and manaches to sell him vot he vonts, dat is dalent; but ven anodder man goes into dot man's shtore and sells him vot he don't vant, and sells him dat right ofer and ofer again, dat is chenius; and dat is de chenius vot my race possess!"—Boston Transcript.

THE USE OF OIL ON ROUGH WATER.

Captain Bower, while on a voyage from New York to the Mediterranean last December in the steamship Ponca, encountered a strong gale with very high seas. He says: "The vessel was deeply laden with grain and became unmanageable. We were running before the seas and shipping large quantities of water, until two small bags filled with colza oil were put over on each side of the bridge. This oil was found to be too light and of little use; but after olive oil was put in the bags no more water was shipped and the decks became almost as dry as in fine weather, although the gale continued for two days. The vessel was drawing twenty-six and a half feet of water, and, if we had not used oil, I do not think she could have withstood the storm."

Captain William Peake, master of the schooner J. F. Krantz, while making a passage from Port Spain, Trinidad, to Boston, met a terrific gale off Cape Hatteras and had the following experience: "The sails were blown away, men washed from the pumps, and boats and other things above the deck wrecked by the heavy seas. I was compelled to head southward and send under bare poles. Then I thought of oil, and determined to see what effect it would have on the sea. Two wooden ten-gallon kegs, containing boiled linseed oil, were lashed to the quarters of the vessel. The oil was allowed to ooze out through two small holes in the heads of the kegs. The effect was all that could be desired. After the oil had spread, no water came on board. The men returned to the pumps, and the vessel was pumped out, and the decks were cleaned up. During the sixteen hours in which oil was used eight gallons were expended."

An examination of thousands of reports like the preceding ones demonstrates that a small quantity, say two quarts per hour, of the thick and heavy oils, especially those of animal and vegetable origin, when allowed to drop into the sea soon spreads over its surface, forming an oily layer within the area of which the waves, instead of breaking, become huge rollers upon which the vessels rise and fall without shock and without shipping any water.—From "Why a Film of Oil can calm the Sea."—Popular Science Monthly.

"I never in my life," said a clergyman to his wife, after a sermon in Westminster Abbey, "so touched the congregation. They were entranced; every eye was upon me from the first word to the last." "No wonder," said his wife; "your gloves were inside your hat, and when you took it off they remained on the top of your head all through the sermon."—Tit-Bits.

THE KIND THAT CURES

VICTORIA H. JOHNSON, New Bedford, Mass.

HOPE HAD FLED!

Chronic Nasal Catarrh!

"People Say it is a Miracle!"

VICTORY FOR DANA'S!

Read this Wonderful Statement, sent us by Church & Hamlin, Pharmacists, Cor. Williams and Pleasant Sts., New Bedford, Mass.:

DANA SARSAPARILLA CO.

DEAR SIRS.—I have had Chronic Nasal Catarrh for many years, and have been a great sufferer. Have had five Physicians who have told me my disease was incurable; they could not help me. My throat was so bad I could eat only the softest food for six months. My nose was swollen out of shape. I could not drink two swallows of water at a time without its being forced through my nostrils. My throat was eaten away so badly that one Physician thought I must have a surgical operation. I had given up all hopes of recovery, but through the influence of friends I began using and with the first bottle began to improve. I have taken three bottles and can assure you I am wonderfully improved, physically and mentally. My throat is all healed. I can eat any hard substance, and people who know me say it is a miracle.

DANA'S SARSAPARILLA

Respectfully yours,

VICTORIA H. JOHNSON.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

Cures Others

Will cure You is a true statement of the action of AYER'S Sarsaparilla, when taken for diseases originating in impure blood; but, while this assertion is true of AYER'S Sarsaparilla, as thousands can attest, it cannot be truthfully applied to other preparations, which unprincipled dealers will recommend and try to impose upon you as "just as good as Ayer's." Take AYER'S Sarsaparilla and AYER'S only, if you need a blood purifier and would be benefited permanently. This medicine, for nearly fifty years, has enjoyed a reputation and made a record for cures that has never been equaled by other preparations. AYER'S Sarsaparilla eradicates the taint of hereditary scrofula and other blood diseases from the system, and it has, deservedly, the confidence of the people.

AYER'S

Sarsaparilla

"I cannot forbear to express my joy at the relief I have obtained from the use of AYER'S Sarsaparilla. I was afflicted with kidney troubles for about six months, suffering greatly with pains in the small of my back. In addition to this my body was covered with pimply eruptions. The remedies prescribed failed to help me. I then began to take AYER'S Sarsaparilla, and in a short time the pains ceased and the pimples disappeared. I advise every young man or woman, in case of sickness resulting from impure blood, no matter how long standing the case may be, to take AYER'S Sarsaparilla."—H. L. Jarmann, 33 William street, New York city.

Will Cure You

Thanksgiving Day.

Now when the frost doth crisp the sward,
And nature, dreaming, lies undressed,
With humble hearts we thank Thee, Lord,
For food and raiment, and for rest.

We thank Thee for Thanksgiving Day,
And all the household joy it brings;
For friendly faces fresh as May,
And mirth that from contentment springs.

How vain the little cares of man,
How very small our biggest hoard;
Didst Thou not in Thy wisdom plan
With plenty still to crown our board?

And those outside the vineyard, Lord,
Who for employment patient wait,
We ask Thy mercy to reward,
Their flood of suffering, Lord, abate.

For politics with inflated lung
Would bawl till Pity's self were dead;
While many a mother's heart is wrung,
And children cry for daily bread.

Curse on their politics and all
That grind the faces of the poor;
That nation soon or late must fall
Where work and wage are insecure.

Wherefore this wail of discontent?
Why should such want and misery be?
When Thou hast in Thy goodness sent
A harvest bountiful and free!

A crumb of comfort in Thy name
Unto the gutter-sparrow given,
Is nothing;—such mockery should shame
The soul that would aspire to heaven.

This is to some a promised land,
But wherefore of its bounty vaunt,
The while they reach not out a hand
Well-filled to those who are in want?

While Lazarus lieth at their gate,
Should these, like princes live and dwell?
Dives was rich, but he, too late,
Once lifted up his eyes in hell.

In giving they should find more joy
Than if, surrounded by the gay,
With milk and honey they did cloy
Their tastes upon Thanksgiving Day.

MOSES TEGGART.

HETTY BARTON'S THANKSGIVING.

Those who knew Miss Hetty Barton often said that she was one of the best and kindest of women if you once got "on the good side of her."

This implied, then, that there was a bad side to Miss Hetty, and I don't know but there was. There is to most people.

Her friends said, also, that Miss Hetty was "so peculiar," and that she was "quite a character." Miss Hetty herself said that she was glad that she was not just like everybody else.

But, although she was "odd" and "peculiar," and the unfortunate possessor of "a bad side," no one ever said that Miss Hetty Barton was not a good woman.

She had, to be sure, an uncomfortable way of saying exactly what she thought about people, and she was so utterly indifferent to the opinion of the world at large that she dressed exactly as she pleased, and did as she pleased, never, however, doing anything that a good woman might not do.

She had a brusque, outspoken, fearless way of expressing her opinion that was not agreeable to a certain class of persons.

She wore a bonnet made some time during the late war. Some people said of it that it looked as though it had gone through the war and taken an active part in every battle. But little cared Miss Hetty for such remarks.

"It's a good, comfortable bunnit," she said; "there ain't a hole in it, and I wouldn't be seen with one of the fol de rols on my head, that they call bunnits nowadays.

So she was "peculiar" enough to wear her old black bonnet to church every Sunday, and, what was still more "peculiar," there was hardly a week of her life that she did not give away the price of a new bonnet to some poor family, and she had bought a good many plain, neat bonnets for poor women who could not go to church because they had nothing to wear.

She was not a rich woman. In fact she had to deny herself things she needed sometimes when she had been giving too much away. She lived on a small farm of her own, in an old but extremely tidy and cozy little yellow house.

She was past 50 years of age, but she lived quite alone half of the year. The other half she kept a hired man. If he was well-intentioned and industrious, she was very kind to him, patient when he made stupid blunders, and forbearing in all things. But if he was at all shiftless and "do-less," she was unsparing in her strictures, and he led a hard life of it. Idleness was her abomination.

The hired man always went away the first of November, and Miss Hetty would feel very lonely for some days thereafter.

Even a lazy hired man was "company." The lazier he was the more scolding he needed to "keep him going," and when he went away there was no one to scold.

But Miss Hetty would keep very busy for several weeks preparing for the long winter to come. Everything in and out of her little house would be in good shape by Thanksgiving Day.

Miss Hetty always counted up her yearly losses and gains about this time, and no matter if the drouth had made only half crops, no matter if half her grain had blasted or her fruit fallen from the trees, no matter if her stock had died, no matter how adverse the fates had been, Miss Hetty always said:—

"Well, I've a dreadful sight to be thankful for. The Lord has been most awful good to me."

And she usually manifested her gratitude by preparing an excellent dinner—she was a famous cook—to which she invited people whom no one else would have thought of inviting.

Last year, a few days before Thanksgiving she began thinking about whom she should invite.

"Let me see," she said. "I had the widow Barnes last year, but she's dead, so, of course, I can't have her this year. Old Miss Tinker, the carpet-weaver, is bed-rid, so all I can do is to send her a basket of things. Old Uncle Billy Lee is in the county house, ten miles from here, or I'd have him come again. How he did eat last year! It done me good to see him.

"There's Aunt Patty Porter; but if her rheumaitz don't get better she can't come. Then there's poor old Betsey Link, poor creetur; I reckon she thinks, as usual, that she ain't a thing on earth to be thankful for, now that the doctor's put her on a gruel diet for two weeks, just at Thanksgiving time, when somebody'd likely to invite her out to dinner.

"I declare, I don't know who to have, and here I've a big fruit-cake, made a month ago, and other vittles under way that'll go to waste if somebody don't eat them, and I can't bear to see good vittle wasted.

"I intended having Tim Breen and his dozen or two of half starved youngsters, but he's moved over to Elderville, so I'm out again.

"Dear me! if things had gone as I thought they would a few years ago, I wouldn't have to eat my meals all alone now, and be so bad off I can't even have somebody to my Thanksgiving dinner.

"I'd just like to know where that rascal of a Bryce Sheldon is, that I took and raised and done for from the time he was five till he was 20 years old, only to have him run off out West, and never so much as write me a line since. But that's my own fault. I told him he needn't write if he left. I was mad, and I meant it at the time, and them Sheldons always was a high-strung set.

"I don't think Bryce has done well, or he'd managed to let me know of it. He was a braggy sort of a boy. I'd give a good deal to know what's become of him. I hope he's done well, and that he's a good man. I tried to learn him to live and do right. He's thirty-five years old, if he's alive now. Dear me! dear me!"

Miss Hetty's face grew very grave, and a corner of her apron went up to her eye. She sat in silence a few moments longer, and then said:—

"I know what I'll do! I ain't feeling so very strong, and I'll not have anybody to dinner this year; but I sha'n't let any vittles go to waste. I'll send my fat old gobbler down to the Widow Haynes, and her and them eight youngsters of hers won't let any go to waste I'll warrant.

"I'll send a basket of things to old Tabby Tinker, and another one to Patty Porter, and another to old man Jackson and his crippled daughter, and—I know what I'll do, I'll go to the city and stay over Thanksgiving with my niece, Harriet Lane. It's ten years since I was there, and Harriet's always asking me to come. I'll go this year and surprise her."

The large city of B—— was a hundred miles from Miss Hetty's home, and she had been to it but three times in all her life.

It was a little before noon on the day before Thanksgiving, when Miss Hetty found herself in the city for the fourth time. People looked curiously at the odd-looking little woman in the funny bonnet and skimpy, old-fashioned black silk dress, and a cloak that was out of style fifteen years ago.

A long thin black veil, with figures worked in silk, such as ladies wore a quarter of a century ago, hung from the lofty front of Miss Hetty's bonnet, and a pair of gloves, with monstrous fur gauntlets, were on her hands. She carried a big carpet-bag in one hand, and on one arm there hung a half-bushel basket so full that the lid was raised several inches.

A snowy-white cloth covered the contents of the basket.

To the first of the dozen or more of hackmen who approached her, she said: "I want to go to 659 Chauncey street."

Fifteen minutes later she stood before the door of a neat little house on the street named. She rang the bell again and again, but no one came to the door.

"Guess I'll go around to the back door," she said; "these city folks have such a silly way of shuttin' themselves up in their back rooms."

She was going down the steps, when a window of a house across the street was raised, and a woman, putting her head out, said:

"Mr. Lane's folks are not at home. They have gone to Mr. Lane's father's in the country, to spend Thanksgiving, and won't be at home for a week."

The head disappeared and the window was lowered.

"Well," said Miss Hetty, disappointed but not dismayed, "this is a nice how-do-you-do, I must say! If I'd had any sense at all, I'd found out whether Harriet was to be at home or not, 'fore I put on so fierce to visit her. Well, what can't be cured must be endured; that's all there is of it.

"I did calculate on having Harriet go 'round with me and get me a new bombazine and a new bonnet, but this dress and bonnet will hang together a good while yet, and so I guess I'll just put back home and save time and money."

She hailed a passing herdic, mentally calling it "a trap of a thing," got into it, and was driven back to the depot.

"And here I've got to lug this big basket of things I bought for Harriet back home, I reckon. I ain't going to throw them away, that's sure, and I—why!"

Miss Hetty threw back her head and lifted her hands in a way common to her when she had a happy thought.

"What an old goose I am!" she said; "the idea of me even thinking of toting all this stuff way back home, when there's thousands of poor people that'd be glad to get it."

She found that her train would not leave the city for three hours.

"It'll be strange," she said, "if in three hours I can't find some one that'd like half of a big fruit-cake, a nice nut-cake, two dozen big, fat doughnuts, a loaf of my potato-yeast bread, that Harriet Lane says is better'n sweet cake, a jar of quince preserves, another of spiced peaches, and a lot of apples and other stuff. If I can't give away vittles like them, I will give up."

Leaving her carpet-bag in charge of the baggage-master, she started forth with the basket on her arm.

"Well," she thought, "I'm beat if I know how to find out who wants a dinner. I can't very well stop folks on the street and ask them if they've anything to eat for to-morrow, and I"—

A big policeman came around a corner at that moment. Miss Hetty walked directly up to him and asked:—

"You know of any real poor families round here?"

The policeman looked down in wonder on the little old lady whose high bonnet didn't reach the top button of his coat.

"Poor families?" he repeated. "Humph! Well, I should say so—dozens and dozens of 'em."

"I thought so," said Miss Hetty. "Do you know of some poor family near here that'd like a good Thanksgiving, dinner, but ain't likely to have one?—some family where there are children."

"Plenty of them, too." said the man, reflectively. "Lemme see—there's the family of Tim Denny, the hod-carrier, who fell from a scaffold last week and broke both legs, and is in the hospital, with six little children and a sick wife at home. But I've heard that the Ladies' Benevolent Union is looking after them.

"There's the Tilneys,— an old woman past 80, with a crippled daughter who is a widow with four children; and there's the Swinly family all down with fever, and no coal nor flour. Poverty Row and Ragged Alley are full of people poorer'n mud, and—come with me."

He put the heavy basket on his own muscular arm as he spoke, and walked away, with Miss Hetty stepping fast to keep pace with him. As they walked into a narrow, dark and dirty court with tall, rickety buildings on either side, the policeman said,—

"There's a couple of little youngsters in a room up at the top of one of these old rookeries that I'd like to see have a share of what's in this basket.

"There's a little girl 'bout ten years old, a bright, smart little thing that it's hard to see in such a place. She has a little brother, a pretty little chap of eight, who fell down stairs six weeks ago and broke his leg, and he can just get up a little. The girl sets there by him day in and day out, telling him yarns and amusing him in such ways as you'd never b'lieve.

"Their mother's dead, and their father don't seem able to get anything to do. He's been sick, too. I've an idee they've seen better days, but they're the poorest of the poor now."

They had reached a dark, dirty entry, and the policeman politely took Miss Hetty's arm to help her up the four flight of dirty stairs before them. At the top of the last flight there was a door hanging lonely on one hinge.

A child's voice was heard on the other side of the door—the voice of the little girl. She was evidently talking to the little boy.

"And so you don't know what Thanksgiving is for?" she was saying. "Well, it's a day good folks take to think of all they've got to be thankful for."

"We ain't got anything, have we, Nellie?"

"Oh, dear me, yes, to be sure."

"What?"

"Well, we can thank God that you wasn't killed the day you fell down stairs, and that papa got well when he was sick. Some children haven't any papa at all, and I'm sure our papa will get work soon and"—

Miss Hetty stepped into the room at that moment. It was a poorer, more squalid room than she had ever been in before in all of her life. A pale little boy was lying on an old lounge in a corner of the room, and by his side sat a thin and pale little girl.

"Well, you poor little souls!" said Miss Hetty, as she dropped on her knees before the boy.

"Well, I—I—declare, if I aint going to beller right out! I can't help it!" and "beller" she did.

"And so—so—you're thankful, are you, dearie?" she said at last, to the little girl. "You pore child! If you can be thankful for this, I'd ort to sing hallelooyer all the time for what I've got.

"I've brought you a basket of things, and I'm going to get you up a good meal 'fore I leave here, if I have to miss my train.

"I just declare if I don't take you two children home with me, if your pa will let you go, and if he don't, I'll—I'll—well, of all things! Bryce! Bryce Sheldon!"

A tall, slight, careworn man had come quietly into the room, and Miss Hetty, with both arms around him, seemed trying to smother him in the depths of her great bonnet.

"I knowed you the minnit I set eyes on you," she cried; "you've changed a good deal, but your eyes are just the same. Dear, dear! I never was so beat over anything! Now there needn't anybody tell me that it was just by accident I some to the city today. I know better. The Lord planned it all. It's all come out 'cordin' to His plan.

"There aint been a night since last Thanksgiving, Bryce, that I aint prayed and prayed that you'd be with me next Thanksgiving, and so you shall be. I just tell you more things are wrought by prayer than most folks know of. Now you're all going home with me."

And so they did, and at night, after the happy children were tucked away in such a bed as they had never seen before, and after Aunt Hetty had tiptoed in half a dozen times to see if they were "all right," and to kiss the very pillows on which their heads rested, then Bryce Sheldon, sitting in penitence and humility under the roof he had left as a wayward boy, told his story of disappointed hopes and of constant struggles with adverse fates.

"But I couldn't come back to you," he said. "I felt that I had forfeited all claim to your love by going away as I went."

"And that's where you were very foolish," said Miss Hetty. "I don't know that I'm so good I could forgive a person seventy times seven times, as the Good Book says, but I could forgive anybody on earth once, and as for your innercent little children—dear me! dear me! why didn't you come years ago?

"But now that you're here, you're going to

FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 24, 1893.

It is expected that the new tariff bill will be ready for public inspection next Monday.

THE nomination of a supreme court judge to succeed Judge Corcoran, resigned, falls to Charles S. Lilley of Lowell, having been made Wednesday.

THE name of Special Commissioner Sickman of Holyoke is mentioned for the place on the board of county commissioners made vacant by the death of Mr. Bagg.

PRENDERGAST, who shot and killed Mayor Harrison at Chicago, objects to his counsel's entering a plea of insanity in his defense, and says he wants to acknowledge the commission of the crime and prove justification.

A NEW use for electricity would seem to be the propulsion of canal boats, the experiment having been successfuly tried on the Erie canal last Saturday, a speed of eight miles an hour having been attained, against about two miles by the old method.

ENGLAND was visited last Saturday by a fearful storm, such as swept the American coast a few months ago, and hundreds of vessels have been wrecked and many lives lost. An unusual experience for English railroads was a heavy fall of snow, the drifts in some places being 12 feet deep.

FREE mail delivery in small towns, which has been tried for a time and which it was hoped would become universal, has not been a success and will be abandoned. The people in sparsely settled districts preferred to go to the post office and have a chance to hear the gossip of the neighborhood rather than wait for the mail, without the latest talk of the town, to come to them.

THE three months of July, August and September make a bad blot on the record of Massachusetts railroad history, for during that period there were reported 313 accidents, scarcely a day passing without the record of some disaster. There were directly involved 352 persons, 87 being killed instantaneously and 269 injured, the majority of whom will carry the marks for life. The two worst accidents were at Chester and North Attleboro.

THE supreme court of New York gives William R. Laidlaw, the clerk whom Russell Sage used as a shield against the attack of the dynamite lunatic, a new trial. This will bring it before a jury, and Mr. Sage will very likely be made to apply a substantial monetary plaster to Mr. Laidlaw's wounds, a thing which he should have been grateful enough to do voluntarily long ago. Men who hired substitutes during the days of the war did not get them for nothing.

THAT is a good recommendation of Warden Bridges of the state prison, that the custom of publicly pardoning two life convicts on Thanksgiving Day be abolished. As long as the custom is followed the hopes of all the life men are naturally raised to the highest pitch at that time, all but two of them to be bitterly disappointed. There are few life prisoners who ever deserve a pardon, and if there are such executive clemency can better be bestowed in private, at some other time.

THE new cruiser Columbia, which had her trial trip last Saturday, attained a speed of 22.81 knots over a measured course, and would have attained a considerably higher mark had not an accident happened to the machinery. In an unofficial trial she made 24.78 knots. This makes her the fastest war vessel afloat, but it is said that she will not hold the banner long, as one of the vessels soon to be tried will probably be faster still. The Columbia is distinctly an American triumph, everything about the vessel having been designed and built in this country.

WHATEVER may be President Cleveland's policy toward Hawaii, it does not yet appear that it is the restoration to power of Queen Liliuokalani. Advices received from Honolulu last Saturday announced the arrival of Mr. Willis, the new United States minister, and his address to President Dole of the provisional government of the islands, in which he not only made no illusion to such a course, but stated that "I am directed by the president to give renewed assurance of friendship, interest and hearty good-will which our government entertains for you and for the people of this island realm." This can hardly be construed as favorable to the restoration of the monarchy. Almost the entire religious press of this country, by the way, is in favor of annexation.

ANOTHER big strike of railroad employes was inaugurated Saturday evening on the Lehigh Valley road. The cause is not one of wages, nor unfair treatment, but simply because the officials of the road decline to treat with the grievance committee of the labor union. Any individual with a grievance was assured a patient hearing, but the men demanded that the committee must be recognized, although they admitted that they knew of few if any cases of grievances. Such a cause will have little sympathy with the public, and at this time, when so many of the roads are reducing the number of their trains and employes, the strikers will very likely find that they have killed the goose which laid the golden egg. Already other men are being hired to take the place of the strikers, who were given an opportunity to return, trains have commenced to move once more, and the prospect is that in a few days they will be running as usual. One peculiar hardship is the fact that the strike throws out of employment 30,000 coal miners, who must remain idle until there are trains to carry their coal.

Springfield was visited by a most disastrous fire early Wednesday morning, the loss being about $400,000. The fire started in a block on the south side of Worthington street, not far from Main, occupied by a rag dealer, and had gained good headway when discovered. The blaze spread with fearful rapidity, and before it was under control had destroyed the Glendower hotel and the Abbey block next to it on Main street. Fortunately there was no wind and the rain was falling, for under other conditions there would have been a fearful conflagration. Help was summoned from Hartford, Chicopee, Holyoke, Pittsfield and Worcester before the flames were extinguished.

George Peterson, a young negro, short of funds and despondent, arrived at Greenfield Monday, and not finding work called upon several physicians, whom he asked to give him something to put him asleep, or to open a vein in his arm, so that he might reach the "undiscovered country" quickly and with little pain. This they refused to do, and he was subsequently arrested and sentenced to one year at Bridgewater.

A ledge of clay fell upon a party of workmen who were excavating for one of the the new buildings at the torpedo station near Newport, R. I., Monday afternoon, killing one man and severely injuring seven.

The big steamer City of Lowell, the largest vessel ever built in Maine, was launched at Bath Monday in the presence of 3500 people.

Ex-Governor and Ex-Secretary of Agriculture Jeremiah M. Rusk died at Viroqua, Wis., Tuesday morning, at the age of 63.

A farmer near Carthage, Ill., has fallen heir to over $1,000,000 worth of property in the heart of Boston.

Stimpson's tapestry carpet mill at Philadelphia shut down Saturday, throwing 500 hands out of work.

One Session a Day for the High School —Other School Matters.

At the meeting of the school committee Tuesday evening it was decided to have only one session of the high school, from 8.45 a. m. to 1.45 p. m., with a 15 or 20 minute recess at noon. This move was made after consultation with the parents of the pupils, 58 of whom voted for the change and 11 against it. There are many reasons for the change. So large a percentage of the pupils come from the other villages—about two-thirds —that one of the teachers was compelled to stay at the school building during the noon hour, getting along with a cold dinner. The time at noon was only an hour, which compelled the scholars here to hurry home, hastily eat their dinner and then hurry back, which was not a healthful thing to do. Then the pupils in the building would hurriedly eat their dinner and go to studying, which was also unhealthful. By the new arrangement the time at noon allows for a light lunch, the pupils reaching their homes early in the afternoon, and getting a chance to study before partaking of the heartiest meal of the day. In the summer the session will probably be from 8 30 to 1.30.

The schools of the town closed to-day for a Thanksgiving vacation of one week.

In appreciation of the service rendered by Miss Fisherdick in taking charge of the high school at the time of the resignation of Principal Knox a few weeks ago the committee, at the meeting Tuesday evening, voted her a letter of thanks for her efforts and an additional month's salary.

Superintendent Small has made a change in his office hours, which will hereafter be from 6.30 to 7.30 Tuesday evening, and from 1.30 to 4.30 Friday afternoon.

The record of attendance for the months of September and October in the schools below the high school is as follows: September—Number of pupils enrolled, 842; average attendance, 760; per cent, 93.6; cases of tardiness, 290; pupils dismissed, 206; time lost by dismissals, 239 hours; days' absence, 790. October—Number enrolled, 841; average attendance, 733; per cent, 91.8; cases tardiness, 294; pupils dismissed, 218; time lost by dismissals, 242 hours; days' absence, 1167, though a part of this was on account of vaccination.

The pupils of the high school sent Wednesday to Mr. Knox, the former principal, who recently resigned to accept a better position in Providence, R. I., a set—six volumes—of John Fiske's American History, bound in half calf, as a token of their esteem and well wishes for his future welfare.

Prices for the Thanksgiving Feast.

The merchants of the town have laid in an abundant stock of good things to grace the festive board for Thanksgiving, which comes next Thursday. On the whole the prices will compare favorably with those quoted last season. Some of the meats run a little lower in price. No great stock of poultry has been purchased as yet, the markets buying only enough for the immediate demand. Florida oranges are just making their appearance. Following is a partial list of the articles needed to celebrate the old New England Thanksgiving, and the prices at which they may be purchased in the stores of this village:—

Turkeys, 20 cents per pound.
Chickens, 18 to 20 cents per pound.
Fowls, 18 cents per pound.
Sirloin roast, 18 to 20 cents per pound.
Rump roast, 12 cents a pound.
Sirloin steak, 20 cents a pound.
Rump steak, 18 to 20 cents a pound.
Round steak, 14 cents a pound.
Lamb, forequarter, 10 cents a pound.
Lamb, hindquarter, 15 cents a pound.
Leg of mutton, 20 cents a pound.
Roast of veal, 12 to 18 cents a pound.

Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Campbell entertained a party of friends at their home on South Main street Wednesday evening.

Rev. A. W. Weeks has moved his family and household goods to Worcester, having purchased a residence there.

The date of the Universalist ministers' conference in St. Paul's church has been changed from Dec. 5th to 7th.

Town Clerk J. B. Shaw left the first of the week for a trip of a week or ten days in the West, principally in Illinois.

Many Palmer people have arranged to attend the Yale-Harvard game of football in Springfield to-morrow afternoon.

Luther C. Cobb is now assistant baggage master at the union passenger station, in place of J. B. Stebbins, resigned.

Dr. W. H. Stowe had the misfortune to lose a fine driving horse Wednesday night, the animal dying of inflammation.

Holden & Fuller shut down their woolen mill again last night for want of orders, and have no idea when it will start up again.

The Lend-a-Hand circle of the Congregational church will meet next Monday afternoon with Mrs. John Sedgwick on Pleasant street.

Tickets for the concert and ball of the Columbian band at Thorndike on the evening of the 29th are on sale at the store of O. P. Allen.

The Ladies' Tuesday Social Club met Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. J. B. Shaw. Next Tuesday it will meet with Mrs. G. H. Wilkins.

The primary department of the Baptist Sunday school, in charge of Mrs. L. W. Parkhurst, had a social in the vestry of the church yesterday afternoon.

Patrick Finnerty was before the district court Monday for drunkenness, and was probated until Dec. 30th. John Higgins, for the same offense, paid a fine of $10.

Britton of South Hadley declined to meet Sullivan of Bondsville in the 100-yards race announced to take place on the park last Saturday afternoon, and forfeited a deposit of $20.

The unsettled accounts of Pinard & Durand insolvent debtors of Three Rivers, will be sold at auction next Friday at 10 o'clock a. m. in front of the bank block on Church street in this village.

Rev. B. M. Fullerton, well known to Palmer people as a former pastor of the Congregational church, has moved from Waltham to Brockton, where his youngest son, Robert, has gone into the insurance business.

The King's Daughters will give an entertainment and social in the parlors of the Congregational church this evening. There will be a fan drill, and home-made candy and fancy articles will be offered for sale.

There were but small audiences at the opera house Monday and Tuesday afternoon and evening to see the stereopticon views and hear the lecture on the World's Fair, and those who stayed away missed a rare treat, especially those who have not been to Chicago.

The New London Northern road will sell round-trip tickets between any of the stations on the Central Vermont system next week for a fare and one-third. This is the special Thanksgiving rate. The tickets will be good going either Wednesday or Thursday, and good to return from Thursday to Saturday, inclusive.

The resignation of W. H. Brainerd as deputy sheriff has been handed in. There are several who would like the position, among them O. W. Studley of this village, Horace Paine of Three Rivers and H. W. Stimson of Palmer Center, while it is said that C. W. Johnson of this village is willing to wear the badge if it is desired.

A change of time goes into effect on the New London Northern road next Sunday, when the "Block Island train," leaving here for New London at 7 a. m. and returning at 7.55 p. m., will be discontinued. The train now reaching Palmer at 5.05 p. m. from New London will arrive at 6, and will run through to Brattleboro, leaving at 7.15, the one now leaving at 8 being taken off. Going south the evening train will leave at 7.15 instead of 7.10.

The recent changes in time on the Boston and Albany road make it bad for Palmer people in the matter of mail from Boston, the mail now arriving at 4.17 in the afternoon instead of 5.28, the next not reaching here until 1.46 a. m., being put up the first thing in the morning. The change on the New London Northern road next week will bring the mail from the south at 6 p. m. instead of 5, while the mail for the north will go at 7.15 instead of 8.

Mrs. E. P. Moore of Springfield, formerly of Palmer, has presented the public library with some interesting specimens of crystals, moss agates, yellow jasper, etc., collected by her near Cape Blomedon, N. S. Also a piece of the table on which Lincoln wrote the emancipation proclamation, a cup made from the cedar of Lebanon, and another turned from a portion of the Charter Oak of Hartford, together with several other articles of kindred nature.

Will approved of—Charles W. Carter, late of Springfield, Alathea S. Carter executrix. License to sell real estate granted in the estate of Margaret Fitzgerald, late of Monson.

At the meeting of the Quaboag Literary Circle Wednesday evening a course of study was decided upon. Next Wednesday evening the subject will be "Who First Discovered America?" with a paper by O. P. Allen. A week from that date Principal Thayer of the high school will speak of the two English types in America, or the settlement of Virginia and New England. Two weeks later Rev. F. E. Jenkins will speak of the Spanish settlements in Florida and Louisiana. The ladies of the club will have a paper each week, to which all are invited to contribute. Mrs. Auger will be the editor for the next two weeks.

Preparations are progressing finely for the dedication of the new Masonic quarters on Central street, which will take place Dec. 5. The dedication of the building and the installation of the new officers will occur in the afternoon, the grand lodge officiating. The following lodges have been invited to send their officers, the rooms being too small to allow the inviting of the lodges entire: Eden of Ware, Quaboag of Warren, Dayspring of Monson, Newton of Wilbraham, Brigham of Ludlow, Vernon of Belchertown and Ethel of Enfield. In the evening there will be a social for members of the order and their families and invited guests.

When Dexter Lombard came up for sentence in the district court last Saturday he was confronted with two cases from Wales, one for selling liquor and the other for keeping a common nuisance, which had been placed on file a couple of years ago. He informed the court that he supposed those cases were out of the way long ago, as he had settled them with H. A. McFarland of Wales, who made the complaints, and that the settlement had cost him a couple of cows. In regard to the matter Mr. McFarland states that no such arrangement was made. At the time the complaints were made Lombard secured bail, Isaiah Hiscock of Wales being his surety, and taking the cows as security.

The Woman's Relief Corps had a most enjoyable time at the celebration of its seventh anniversary Wednesday afternoon and evening. About 60 were present from the several corps invited, which with the members and their daughters swelled the number to about 125. The regular work of the order was gone through with in the afternoon, after which the visitors were entertained with music, recitations and the farce, "Mrs. Willis's Will," with Mrs. W. A. Weld, Mrs. C. E. Dewey, Mrs. F. R. Lawton, Mrs. L. E. Carpenter and Mrs. G. W. Lyman in the cast. A collation followed, and in the evening the members of L. L. Merrick post of the Grand Army were present by invitation, a pleasant social time, with music and recitations, being passed until the departure of trains which carried the guests to their homes.

If the Boston and Albany road wishes to accommodate its patrons at this station it might hang a card on Camp's train which leaves for Springfield at 2.11 p. m., stating the character and destination of the train. As it starts from the track of the Ware River road it is not infrequently mistaken for the train to Ware, and the passenger is then compelled to go to Springfield and return on the 3.14. Of course he gets the Ware train, but it makes an extra expense, as he is made to pay his fare both ways on his extra trip. A card hung on the train while it stands waiting would do much to obviate this, or the brakeman might be instructed to call the destination of the train through the cars just before they start, or both. The calling of the train in the waiting room just before it starts is another thing which should be done.

Evard Pecure, a 16-years-old lad from Thorndike, was before the district court Tuesday for cruelly killing a cat, the prosecution attempting to show that he threw it in the water several times, removing it after each immersion and watching its struggles. Young Pecure claimed that the animal was suffering with a broken back, and that after being asked by the owner to kill it he "pegged it in the river" till he thought it was all dead, but as it showed signs of life after being taken from the water he held it under until it was fully done for. His Honor evidently was not up in the vernacular, and wanted to know how Pecure "pegged" a cat in the river, whereupon he replied: "Why just t'run it in," which expression the court had evidently heard before, and deciding that the drowning of the cat under the circumstances was justifiable and not attended with unnecessary cruelty, the lad was discharged.

Church Notes.

Mass will be celebrated at 8 o'clock in St. Thomas's Catholic church next Thursday morning, Thanksgiving Day.

At the Baptist church Sabbath morning the pastor will preach a Thanksgiving sermon instead of holding a service on the following Thursday. Evening service at 7 o'clock, subject: "Parable of the Wheat and Tares." Meeting for men at 6 o'clock.

A large congregation assembled last Sunday morning to hear Rev. H. F. Moulton's sermon on endless punishment, in the Universalist church. He did not refer to any discussion of the theme of late in town, but made a straightforward statement of facts which he claimed did away with the theological dogma. The discourse will be put into pamphlet form for distribution.——Mr. Moulton will speak next Sunday morning on "Thanksgiving — Its meaning, Past and Present."——The regular praise and prayer service will be held at St. Paul's Wednesday evening of next week instead of Thursday. Subject, "What are we thankful for?"—or, a conversational Thanksgiving hour.

The subject at the Congregational church Sunday morning will be "Christian Union." In the evening there will be a musical and responsive Thanksgiving service, and an address will be given on "An Outlook from Thanksgiving Mountain, Columbian year." ——In connection with the Sunday school Sunday morning twenty or more stereopticon views will be shown of Jerusalem, Mount of Olives, the River Jordan, and the Dead Sea as they are to-day. Those wishing to get a correct idea of these places are invited to be present, even if they do not join the school permanently.——The Learners' and Workers' class in the church parlors next Tuesday evening will have for its subject "The Beginning of Christ's Work in Galilee." The first twenty minutes will be spent in a general discussion of the question, "What further improvements shall we make in our Sunday school?"——A special Thanksgiving service will be held Wednesday evening, and the usual Thursday evening meeting will be omitted.

THORNDIKE.

Mrs. Joseph Bennett and daughter of Connecticut were the guests of George Farr this week.

Mrs. Henry Morgan spent Thursday of last week with her sister, Miss Lucy Fairbanks, at Enfield.

Mrs. William Sullivan and child of Holyoke were the guests of Mrs. Timothy Sullivan this week.

Presiding Elder Thorndike of Springfield preached an able sermon last Sunday in the Methodist church on "Faith."

The W. C. T. U. will meet the first Thursday after Thanksgiving with Mrs. O. A. Parent at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

A fire broke out in the napping-room of the Boston Duck Company's mill Monday forenoon at 9.45, but was extinguished by the help of the mill without sending out an alarm. The damage was not much, only what was done by water.

THREE RIVERS.

Mrs. Deardon of Holland, Ct., spent a few days this week with Mrs. J. Tricket.

Several persons from here attended the Sunday school convention at Ware yesterday.

The teachers all left for their respective homes to-day to spend the Thanksgiving vacation.

Rev. E. S. Hill of Anthony, R. I., spent a few days this week with his brother, Otis B. Hill, who is seriously ill.

Mr. and Mrs. Amos Olds intend to spend Thanksgiving with their daughter, Mrs. C. Davis, at South Willington, Ct.

Mrs. F. B. Joy has returned to her home in Newton, after a stay of a number of weeks with Mrs. J. B. Burlingame and other friends in this vicinity.

Dennis Horgan's friends were mistaken when they rumored that he was an applicant for the position of postmaster, as he had no intention of soliciting the appointment.

The entertainment given by the S. C. E. in the vestry of the Union church last Tuesday evening was an enjoyable affair throughout. C. Ruggles showed some fine stereopticon views of Boston.

Next Sunday at the Baptist church Mr. Weeks will take as a subject for his sermon "The Holy Spirit." The subject for the evening services will be "Infidelity, or the Rejection of God's Word."

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Burlingame spent the greater part of last week in Stafford, Ct., where the 50th birthday of Mrs. Burlingame's brother, George D. Shaw, was celebrated last week Thursday by a large number of his friends and Grand Army comrades, he being Junior Vice Commander of Winter Post, 44. Mr. Shaw enlisted in the 36th Mass. Vols. from Three Rivers at the age of 18.

The following is a list of the pupils who were neither absent nor tardy in the public school during the term just ended: Grammar school—Alic Lupien, Moiceline Camerline, Matilda Magee, Ida White, Clayton Barnes, Elmer Dodge, Charles White and Robert Barton. First primary — Henry Fredette, Glenn Paine, Mary Conroy, Mabel Collins, Lila Fish, Nora Gauthier, Lillie Hebert, Eliza Reed and Cornelia Vient.

About 20 of the young people of this place who are interested in literary pursuits met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Willis last Friday evening to organize a society for the mutual benefit and general entertainment of of all who may wish to participate in the movement. A society was organized with Miss Addie Walker president, Miss Cora B. Clark vice president, and Miss Crane secretary and treasurer. A committee of three was chosen to draw up a constitution, and select a name for the society. It was voted to hold a meeting in a room over the Palmer Mill office the following Monday evening, and about 30 were present. The exercises of the evening consisted of an organ overture by Miss C. B. Clark, a reading by Eva Forte which elicited much applause, and a short address by W. Gannan. It was voted by those present to take up the study of authors, to commence with Longfellow on next Monday evening. Those who have initiated the movement desire it understood that everyone is welcome to the Monday evening meeting.

Charles Blair of Warren spent Sunday in town as the guest of C. M. Gage.

Miss Delro Baily of Far Rockaway is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Flynt.

Mrs. Ames of Chicopee Falls was the guest of Miss Clara A. Wood over Sunday.

Mrs. Shoughrue of Greenwich has been the guest of her daughter, Mrs. Johnson.

Arthur Johnson was quite ill the latter part of last week, but is able to be at work now.

Mrs. J. Howard of Brimfield is visiting her sister, Mrs. F. E. Parks, on Washington street.

Miss L. S. Rose, a student at Wilbraham academy, was the guest of Miss Ida Jones Seymour.

Miss Wood, superintendent of schools, spends the Thanksgiving recess at her home in Springfield.

Mrs. Mary Buffington has returned from a several days' stay at Ware with her brother, Charles Upham.

Miss Alice Heath of Amherst has been the guest of the Misses Nichols of Green street for the past week.

E. B. Converse, a traveller for a New York dye wood house, is seriously ill at his home on Cushman street.

Ralph Clifford has sold his black horse "Nig" to Reuben Smith of South Monson. Reported price, $180.

The children are collecting their annual Thanksgiving contributions for the "Little Wanderers" in Boston.

Miss Esther Holmes is having some fine monumental work set up in the Center cemetery on the Holmes lot.

Harry Crosby has moved his family from Mrs. Horace Moulton's tenement to the Riley house at the Branch.

Lavater Munn of Springfield formerly of Monson, is recovering from a broken ankle, received some six weeks ago.

Sault Bros. will give an exhibition of their strength at an entertainment by other Monson talent in Brimfield to-night.

Oliver Hyde of Belchertown, a former resident of Monson, spent last Friday in town, calling upon old acquaintances.

Prof. James Tufts and wife of Chicago University have received an addition to their home in the person of a daughter.

Charles R. Buffington has been building a stone wall between his premises and those of Mr. Colburn. He is also building a small barn.

R. M. Reynolds, who has been seriously ill of late, and whose life was despaired of Saturday, is much better, and will probably be about in a short time.

John Maguire expects to start his cider mill next Tuesday. Mr. Maguire has spared no pains in making this one of the most complete mills in Hampden county.

A man supposed to be a tramp was seen peeking into the window at Warren Dane's house Wednesday evening. Mr. Lull and Mr. Dane scoured the neighborhood, but could not find him.

Miss Alice E. Darling of South Main street will entertain a select party of bicyclists this evening. The plan is to take a moonlight ride, then return to Miss Darling's home for refreshments.

Master Howard Gould of Brooklyn, who has been so ill at the home of his grandmother, Mrs. Welcome Converse, is slowly recovering, his father, Dr. Gould, returning home the first of the week.

G. H. Newton will sell at auction to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock on the Barry farm, four cows, a yearling, pig, buggy, harness, hay, household goods, etc., the property of the late Margaret Fitzgerald.

Eighteen members of the Marcus Keep Woman's Relief Corps attended the seventh anniversary celebration of the corps at Palmer Wednesday afternoon and evening, and all report a very pleasent time.

John H. Murphy, clerk at the Monson House, has resigned that position and accepted a similar one at the Sanford Hotel, Sanford, Fla. He leaves New York next Wednesday for his new position.

John Hall of the Monson Granite Co. has the design of a soldiers' monument in Wilbraham, which that company has the contract for. The work will be sufficient to keep the company busy until June.

L. A. Sargent, assistant supervisor of drawing in Massachusetts, spoke very entertainingly to the teachers and others at the Green street schoolhouse last Saturday on "Drawing and its relation to nature study.

Mr. Theodore Reynolds kindly opened his library yesterday and allowed the Academy seniors who are studying English literature, to examine his valuable copies of Shakespeare and his rare editions of the Bible.

Much sympathy has been expressed for Rev. and Mrs. Waterman of Geneseo, Illinois, in the death of their sons and illness of their daughters, as announced in last week's JOURNAL. Since then one of the daughters has died.

George C. Flynt has exchanged his black colt Sultan with parties in Holyoke for real estate valued at $1500. Sultan was bred and raised by Mr. Flynt, and has won several races this season, getting a record of 2.28½ over a half-mile track, and has a trial mile of 2.20.

The remains of Mrs. Elizabeth Moulton, aged 65, who died Saturday at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. W. H. King, in Willimantic, were interred in the Moulton Hill cemetery Tuesday. The short service at the grave was conducted by Rev. Harry Blackford of the Universalist church.

G. Henry Flynt of Yale Theological Seminary will spend Sunday with his brother. E. B. Flynt, at Hammond Hall, and will be present at and address the meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Congregational church, which will celebrate its fifth anniversary Sunday evening.

Master Allen Buffington was the victim of a very painful accident Thursday morning. A stone weight thrown by a boy who was jumping struck him in the forehead, barely escaping the eye, and inflicting a deep gash. Dr. N. W. Rand was called, and after taking several stitches dressed the wound.

The union Thanksgiving service will be held, as for many years past, in the Congregational church at eleven o'clock next Thursday. A chorus of about 50 voices will lead the singing. A new responsive service, prepared for the day, will be used. The address will be brief and appropriate. All are invited to be present.

G. L. Fuller, the shoe dealer, has on exhibition in his store window a ladies' gold watch which will be given to some person on Dec. 30th, the lucky person being the one guessing nearest to the time the watch stops. Every person making a purchase to the value of 25 cents or over is entitled to a guess with each purchase.

Many people will remember the Gilbert family of jubilee singers, which gave a fine concert in Memororial Hall a year ago under the auspices of the Y. P. S. C. E. of the M. E. church. This same family will give a concert next Monday evening in the M. E. church, consisting of vocal and instrumental music. It will be a concert of much merit by cultivated and artistic colored singers.

The young people of the Universalist society presented the drama, "Bread Upon the Waters," Tuesday evening at the vestry in a very creditable manner. Each part was well taken, showing careful study. The cast of characters was:

Dr. Harlem, Principal of Greenlake Seminary.....A. C. Page
Harry Harlem, his Son.....George H. Seymour
Fred Hastings, } Pupils.....{ Clarence W. King
Bob Winders, } Pupils.....{ Arthur H. Orcutt

Lucy Harlem, Doctor's Daughter.Musa A. Babbitt
Mrs. Loring, Housekeeper...Bertha A. Thompson
Dilly, Picked from the Streets....Myrtis A. Perrin

Eli Rogers, one of our oldest and most respected citizens, died last Friday afternoon after a two months' illness. The funeral was held Sunday, Rev. William H. Marble officiating. Mr. Rogers was born at Wales, November, 1804. He moved to Monson in 1848 and held for about fifteen years the position of dyer with the Hampden Woolen Company, since which time he has owned and lived on a farm in the west part of the town, Mr. Rogers leaves a widow and two sons, Henry G. and Lewis., who comprise the firm of Rogers & Co.

An entertainment will be given in the Silver street mission by the young people of the Congregational church this evening, consisting of music by a male quartette, C. C. Keep, Mr. Fitz, Henry Miller and Chas. S. Wood, by a ladies quartette, Miss Addie Peck, Florence Deverell, Minnie Smith and Mable Gates, recitations by Mabel E. Watson, Alma Bissell, Florence Deverell, L. R. Burrows, Horace Broughton, Dennis J. McCarthy and George W. Brown, and a violin solo by Chas. S. Wood. The Christian Endeavor society so lately organized at this mission already has a membership of 17, and more will join in near future.

After the Fire.

The school children are collecting souvenirs of the fire.

A large number of people from the adjoining towns have visited the ruins.

Mrs. Inez Ferrell, boarding mistress for Heimann and Lichten, is to occupy Wilbur M. Fay's house on Washington street.

Postmaster Farrington is getting his new quarters into shape as fast as possible. Quite a number have already been assigned boxes.

The safes of G. L. Keeney and Norcross Bros. stand on the sidewalk as silent proofs of man's ingenuity in coping with the elements.

The ruins are still smouldering, but the work of clearing up the debris is being pushed by Mr. Norcross. The 60 tons of coal, which would have been of great value to the poor people in town, is still glowing, and will for many days to come.

It is an ill wind that blows no one good, and this recent fire has made business brisk at the insurance offices in town. The Morris & Farrington agency has issued 15 new policies, G. H. Newton five, and many of the old policies have been increased.

Monson has three night watchmen now, who patrol the streets till 3 o'clock in the morning, the beats being from the old bank building to the Congregational church, Cushmon House and return; central part of town, including Squier's mill; the third in South Monson.

Criticism is made that the papers, other than the JOURNAL did not give the Monson fire company credit due them. No one who witnessed the scene could fail to appreciate that the "laddies" did faithful, efficient work, those particularly who were on S. F. Cushman, Jr's., house, and the boarding house, where the heat was so intense, showing much bravery.

Insurance agents have been numerous in town this week, settling the claims of the burned-out firms. The insurance of George L. Keeney, druggist, has been satisfactorily adjusted, and he has received $2800. The Windsor Club loss has also been settled for $500; the club has appointed a committee of five, consisting of S. H. Newton, Frank Shaw, Charles King, E. L. Wales and George C. Flynt, to report on new rooms, which will doubtless be in the new bank block. C. J. Leary, the plumber, has had his insurance adjusted and has received $1000 on stock, $400 on building and $100 on tools. Mr. Leary has secured the basement of Julius N. Graves's house on Washington street, and will continue business there; he has already procured another lot of goods, and is able to fill orders promptly. S. Simmons, the clothier, has secured apartments in the store of Gray & Lambert, and will open next week with an entirely new stock of the latest styles of goods; his insurance has been paid in full, $2500. The insurance on the block, $18,000, will be settled in full. S. Fred Cushman received $195 for the damage to his house and $25 for damage done in moving furniture. S. F. Cushman received $200. The Father Mathew Society has received $200 for its loss. The future location of the society is at present undecided, but a committeee is scouring the town for quarters.

Academy Notes.

Again the students are called upon to mourn with one of their number, Miss Harriet R. Pease, preceptress, receiving a telegram Monday morning telling of the sudden death of her brother, Theodore C. Pease, who was professor of sacred literature in Andover Theological Seminary. The sympathy of the students was extended to Miss Pease by a rising vote.——Miss Rosa La Machia, '97, has left the academy and returned to her home in Boston.——The class of '96 held its regular meeting Wednesday afternoon and elected the following officers: President, L. A. Prouty; vice president, R. O. Watkins; secretary, Miss Gertrude B. Gage; treasurer, Miss Mabel E. Watson.——The entertainment given by Miss Lulu M. Stanley and local talent for the benefit of the senior class was of a very high order. Charles F. Orcutt rendered some fine vocal selections, and J. S. R. Coy piano solos. The receipts of the entertainment were $28.——The class of '95 held its first meeting Wednesday afternoon and appointed a committee of three, Carl M. Blair, George W. Brown and Miss Annie L. Rathburn, to draw up and submit a constitution next meeting, Dec. 4. The class also voted to have a class ring, and appointed Miss Kate Parker, Miss Alice King and James Chism to select designs.——The young ladies of the Senior class were entertained by the lady teachers, Misses Strong and Pease, Wednesday afternoon. Invitations have been issued to the young ladies of the middle class to call on Misses Pease and Strong at Hammond Hall next Wednesday, but owing to Miss Pease's affliction, it will be postponed until some later date.——All the occupants of Hammond Hall will attend the social at Silver Street this evening.

On account of the lack of work at the Slater & Co. machine works several of the employes have left town.

The Methodist society has been holding a series of meetings this week which have been well attended, with much interest manifested.

Much interest is manifested in the Aid Society. The Knowles pump works has contributed $100. Mrs. Morse, one of the lady managers, has kindly volunteered to fix over all clothing.

The officers of Forest Chapter, No. 42, Order of the Eastern Star, which was organized last week, are: W. M, Lavinia V. Gage; W. P., Jesse T. Leonard; A. M., Carrie P. Kelley; secretary, Louise A. Root; treasurer, Mary L. Blair; W. C., Lorena W. Peebles; A. C., Edna E. Deland; chaplain, Julia Hitchcock; organist, Ada Wetherbee; sentinel, Fred M. Stevens. The meetings will be held on the second Monday of each month.

WALES.

Mrs. Lizzie Streeter of Lynn is visiting at H. A. McFarland's for a few days.

David A. Shaw has brought to town a fine Jersey cow, purchased at Tolland, Ct.

Mr. Edson visited the schools Monday and held a teachers' meeting in the afternoon.

The Methodist people had an oyster supper Wednesday evening, which was quite well patronized.

H. A. McFarland has newly shingled and painted his block occupied by the Postal Telegraph Co. for an office and as a tenement by Mr. Alders, who has charge of the line in this vicinity.

Eden D. Shaw, while loading wood on his lot near Stafford, found a large pocketbook containing $59 in money and a note that had been paid, made by a Mr. Carpenter of Charlton, payable to a Mr. Moore in Union, Ct. In order to get a clue to the rightful owner, Mr. Shaw found Mr. Moore, who said the note was paid, and it should be in possession of Mr. Carpenter of Charlton. Mr. Shaw then went to Carpenter and found that the note was left in an old wallet that had been loaned a few weeks previous to a hired man named Kelly, a horse trader, who went to the Stafford fair with about $80 in it. He lost it somewhere on the road home from the fair, after trading and spending about $20. On finding Kelly he said that he had traded horses and started home with about $60 left, and was somewhat under the influence of liquor, but knew that there was no danger of his money being taken. On seeing two men coming he surmised they were after his money, so he ran into the wood-lot near the road and tucked his pocketbook into a pile of wood, but could not remember where it was and had no expectation of ever seeing it again. On inquiry, Mr. Shaw found that Kelly had told several that he had lost it; he also described the location of the money in the book and different kinds of bills, so Mr. Shaw was convinced Kelly was the owner and accordingly delivered it to him.

WARE.

Ayer's Hygienic Coffee can be used any time of day or night with benefit.

Dandruff is an exudation from the pores of the scalp that spreads and dries, forming scurf and causing the hair to fall out. Hall's Hair Renewer cures it.

Many people suffer for years from troublesome and repulsive sores, boils and eruptions, without ever testing the marvelous curative properties of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The experiment is, certainly, worth trying. Be sure you get Ayer's Sarsaparilla and no other.

The smallest "cat-boil" is large enough to show that the blood needs purifying—a warning which, if unheeded, may result, not in more boils, but in something very much worse. Avert the danger in time by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Cured others, will cure you.

Great Men.

The greatest men are those who have done the most for the good and advancement of the human race. The man who stands most prominently before the public to-day in the cure of disease, is Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the discoverer of that wonderful remedy, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. He is the founder of that great system of giving consultation and advice by means of letter correspondence, free of charge.

Write him a description of your complaint, or send for his symptom blank, and he will send you an exact description of your disease. He gives most careful and explicit attention to all letters, answering all questions and thoroughly explaining each symptom so that you will know exactly what your complaint is; and for all this he makes no charge. Dr. Greene is the most successful specialist in the cure of all nervous and chronic diseases and he gives you the benefit of his valuable advice with no expense to yourself, and by thus writing him about your case, you will undoubtedly regain your health.

DEATH OF SHERLOCK HOLMES.

The Greatest Detective Ever Known in London.—The Exciting Adventure Which Ended His Life.

The adventures of Sherlock Holmes have been a series of the most exciting and able detective stories which have ever been written. The last one ever to be given to the world ends with the death of Mr. Holmes, and it will be published in the next issue of the Boston Sunday Globe, Nov. 26. It is intensly interesting and exciting, and it is thrilling and fascinating from the first line to the last.

The Globe, by the way, leads all of the Boston newspapers in circulation and advertising, and never was increasing its business more rapidly than now.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

Big Gain in a Month.

A gain of ten thousand in circulation within a month is something extraordinary for a newspaper. But the Boston Journal has achieved that since the election. The bright, newsy character of the Journal is evidently being recognized all over New England, since thousands of new readers are turning to its columns.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria

Forbes & Wallace's.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., November, 1893.

There's no more agreeable subject, with Thanksgiving in sight, than pure, lustrous table linen, white as the flying snow; for it is the linen first of all that makes or mars the appearance of the Thanksgiving dinner.

The subject is not dull at any time, except in the advertisements.

The finest heavy linens, known to all luxurious people, are from John S. Brown & Sons of Belfast. They are very fine, and of styles for various tastes.

We have lately received these table linens, with napkins to match, at each of these prices:

|---|---|
| 66 inches wide, | 75 cents a yard |
| 72 | 87½ |
| 72 | 1.00 |
| 72 | 1.25 |
| 72 | 1.50 |

The patterns are uncommonly fine, and not only the patterns, but the fabric as well.

Glorious white pattern cloths are here in bewildering variety also; and the prices are not out of the way.

|---|---|
| 2½ yards long | $1.95 to $6.25 |
| 3 | 2.25 7.50 |
| 3½ | 3.00 8.85 |
| 4 | 6.00 10.00 |

Napkins to match 75c to $10.

Right aisle.

The sorts of coats that lag behind the others are going on the bargain tables. Almost nothing is at cost, almost everything below. We might almost venture to say that not a thing but what will go below cost.

This sale is not made because we have too many coats, nor because trade lags; but to even up the quality of our regular stock, to keep it strictly first class, to move it alike, whether you like it or not, to sweep it out.

Tables are arranged as follows:

|---|---|
| Everything on 1st table, | $ 2.50 |
| Everything on 2d table, | 5.00 |
| Everything on 3d table, | 7.50 |
| Everything on 4th table, | 10.00 |

THE SUPERB MARKET REPORTS

of THE N. Y. TRIBUNE are now positively the best printed by any newspaper in New York City. THE TRIBUNE is the only newspaper in New York, which sends men personally into every market in the city every day of the business week to obtain actual prices and the state of trade. Other papers make up quotations largely from circulars. Commercial travelers say unanimously that THE TRIBUNE'S Market Reports are true. THE TRIBUNE now beats all rivals in the accuracy and wonderful completeness of its quotations. To be successful, a practical and level headed man must keep fully informed as to prices and the state of trade. This can be done by taking THE TRIBUNE.

ILLUSTRATIONS

of the news of the day are freely used in THE TRIBUNE. This paper has its own corps of artists and photo-engraving plant. It contains features for the ladies and children; foreign letters and book reviews, and many special features.

NO MATTER WHETHER

you agree with THE N. Y. TRIBUNE or not, in its sentiments, can you afford not to read its dollar weekly, regularly, while a reactionary party is in power and

THESE TIMES OF CHANGE?

THE N. Y. TRIBUNE is the ablest, most aggressive, and soundest advocate of Republican politics. What the Republican party intends can be learned from the N. Y. TRIBUNE. THE TRIBUNE'S motto is the Truth and only the Truth. The articles of Roswell G. Horr, on the Tariff, Currency, Wages, etc., will be continued.

REMEMBER!

THE N. Y. TRIBUNE is the cleanest, purest, and safest of newspapers for your family. Does a weekly newspaper, which invades the home with immorality, sensation, and falsehood, receive your sanction? The broad columns and large print of THE N. Y. TRIBUNE make it the easiest paper to read.

THE TRIBUNE has the largest circulation of any Weekly in the United States, issued from the office of a daily. We challenged the country for a year, with no takers.

Doctors Discouraged, Relief Found.

Mr. C. E. Bartholomew, Kalkaska, Mich., writes: "I am as certain as I now live, that Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy saved my life when I was a victim of Bright's disease." If you are suffering from Bright's disease, diabetes, or any urinary trouble you should use only this positive cure.

"I had been troubled since 1869," writes S. N. Arnold of Rochester, N. Y., "with gravel and catarrh of the bladder. Tried several doctors, but got no relief. Finally at the advice of a friend, I used Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. The result was marvelous; after using a few bottles I was entirely cured."

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception: "I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation others are taking this valuable remedy." Mrs. Morgan, 569 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, a discovery of an eminent specialist in heart disease, is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from all opiates or dangerous drugs.

Her Attractions.

She has no dazzling charms, no classic grace,
Nothing, you think, to win men's hearts about her;
Yet, looking at her sweet and gentle face,
I wonder what our lives would be without her.

She has no wish in the great world to shine;
For work outside a woman's sphere no yearning;
But on the altar of home's sacred shrine
She keeps the fire of pure affection burning.

We tell our griefs into her patient ear;
She whispers "Hope" when ways are dark and dreary;
The little children like to have her near,
And run into her open arms when weary.

Her step fall's lightly by the sufferer's bed;
Where poverty and care abound she lingers;
And many a weary heart and aching head
Find gifts of healing in her tender fingers.

She holds a helping hand to those who fall,
Which gently guides them back to paths of duty;
Her kindly eyes, with kindly looks for all,
See in: uncomeliest souls some hidden beauty;

Her charity would every need embrace;
Too shy and timid, fear not to address her;
With loving tact she rightly fills her place,
While all who know her pray that heaven may bless her.

The child is taught at school that a dozen means twelve every time, but when the child grows into a man he finds that a dozen is a very elastic term. A baker's dozen is thirteen, and so is a publisher's or a news agent's in many parts of the world. In some sections a dozen of fish means twenty-six, and there are other anomalies of this kind. But to find a dozen indicating anything from two to fifty, it is necessary to go to the earthenware trade. Here the size and weight of articles decide how many make a dozen, and in jugs, bowls, plates, and so on there are two, four, six, eight, or more to the dozen. A dozen composed of twelve articles is a very unusual thing in the wholesale pottery trade, and as a result there are few clerkships more difficult to hold than in this line. I tried the work once and failed ignominiously. To have to find the cost of 500 articles at so much a dozen, when that dozen may mean anything, is a very difficult task until a man get thoroughly used to it. That is easy then, I have been told, though I never got used to it sufficiently to know of my own knowledge.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Head of Four Churches.

Is It Any Wonder Ministers Break Down?

Bishop Phillips Brooks Died as the Result of Overwork.

Rev. Henry Langford, the Eminent Preacher, just Saved from same Fate.

Overwork kills.

The great Bishop, Phillips Brooks, was stricken down in the prime of his manhood and usefulness as the direct result of physical and nervous exhaustion brought on by overwork.

Now comes the news that Rev. Henry Langford, the eminent Baptist divine, of Weston, West Va., has just escaped utter nervous and physical prostration.

He is pastor of four churches. Is it any wonder that he broke down in health?

The reverend gentleman gives a very interesting account of himself and his troubles.

"For ten years," he said, "I have been nervous and growing worse all these years. During the last four or five years I became so nervous I could scarcely sign my name so it could be read. I was so nervous that I could not read my own sermon notes after they had been laid aside awhile.

"I was unable to hold my head steady in the pulpit, nor could I hold or handle my books or papers without embarrassment, owing to the trembling and weakness of my hands and arms. I was so nervous that I could scarcely feed myself. In fact my nervous system was wrecked.

"I tried many remedies recommended by physicians, but found no permanent relief.

REV. HENRY LANGFORD.

"One day I was in the store of R. S. Ogden, at Sardis, W. Va., and he said to me: 'You take two bottles of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy and if you say it don't help you, you need not pay for it.'

"I took two bottles of this medicine and found so much relief that I bought two more bottles, and now I am wonderfully improved in health and strength. Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy did it. I can heartily and truthfully recommend it to the sick. Too much cannot be said in praise of this splendid medicine.

"I say this for the good of other sufferers from nervous and prostrating diseases who can be cured by this remedy. For myself I am thankful to God that I found Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy and for what it has done for me."

You who suffer with nervous and physical weakness and prostration from overwork or other cause have only to follow the example and recommendation of Rev. Mr. Langford in order to insure a return of health and strength. This truly remarkable and harmless vegetable remedy is the discovery of the successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. The doctor can be consulted in all cases free of charge, personally or by letter.

A GIRL OF BUSINESS.

"Father, I would like to see you in the library on a matter of business."

"Very well, Viola—come along. Now then, what is it?"

"Father, are you aware that Henry Noodenhammer has been paying me his attentions for the last year?"

"Yes, and I've felt like kicking him! The idea of a Noodenhammer daring to aspire to the hand of a Grafton!"

"He has asked me to be his wife."

"The scoundrel! Why I'll maul the tar out of him!"

"And I have almost promised," she placidly continued.

"What! What! My daughter marry a Noodenhammer working for $15 a week? Never! Go to your room while I seek this base adven——"

"Father, I want to talk straight business with you," she interrupted. "As you are aware this is the state of Massachusetts."

"Yes."

"Have you seen the vital statistics of the state for the last year?"

"No; of course not. The idea of that Jim Noodenhammer skulking around here after my——"

"Wait! According to statistics this state has 871,240 more females than males. There are 226,890 more marriageable girls than can find husbands, to say nothing of 182,421 widows anxious for a No. 2. The number of young men in the state earning over $15 per week and in the market is only 22,107. There are camped on the trail of these young men exactly 220,000 young women and 150,000 widows. Three out of every five children born are girls. Death removes two young men to one married man or old bachelor."

The old man turned pale and grasped a chair for support, and after a pause she continued.

"From June to October over 80,000 marriageable young women visit our watering places, and it is estimated that 31,442 of them catch husbands, thus further reducing the chances of a resident. Father, take this pencil and figure out your Viola's chances of catching another man if she lets James Noodenhammer canter away."

"Great Scott!" he gasped, after figuring for a moment. "Why your chances are only one in 21,875,947!"

"Just as I figured it out myself. What shall I say to him this evening?"

"Say! Say! Why tell him that you'll have him and be mighty glad of the chance, and don't let him draw a long breath before you add that the ceremony can take place right after breakfast to-morrow morning and that I'm to give you a wedding present of $5000 in cash."—Chicago Times.

A Conservative Estimate of Himself.—"Reginald," said the young man's father, "you couldn't earn your salt." "Oh, yes, I could, fahtah," he replied complacently, and after some thought added, "but I might have to fall back on you for the peppah."—Washington Star.

At a school examination the inspector asked a boy why the earth turned round the sun on its own axis. The boy answered, with great promptitude, "Because it doesn't want to get roasted too much on one side."—Tid-Bits.

In Search of an Easier Method.—Pat (with bad tooth) "I'll take a bit uv that toothpowder, ay ye plaze. Wan uv them dentist felleys pulled a tooth for me wunce, but I'm after tryin' blastin' on this wun."—Harper's Bazar.

Deacon Jones (in saloon)—"Wh-why, Brother Smith, I-I 'spect yer surprised to see me h'yer"—Smith—"Oh, no, I'm surprised to have you see me here".—Cleveland Plaindealer.

JANE'S HOLIDAY.

Far into the night Jane patched and contrived, with that new, wonderful hope of taking the children to the circus guiding her fingers. Her husband, who usually spent all his money on drink, had promised to give her and the children the first real treat of their lives. She even produced one or two faded ribbons, relics of wedding finery, and sighed as she pinned them on, thinking how faded, too, was the face above them.

The day was hot and they left their home early "so's to git our money's wuth," said Jim. The children huddled around their mother almost stupefied with admiration at the parade.

"Jes' wait!" insinuated Jim.

From the summit of the great pavilion to a point within a foot of the ground a rope was stretched, and a gaily appareled female began to descend the perilous causeway. Jane watched with painful absorption.

"I'm glad it's over," she said.

But Jim had disappeared.

"Pap's gone to get us in," said one of the children.

There was a crash of music inside the tent, the crowd begah to stream upward, the field was deserted save for a group gathered around a table hitherto concealed from Jane's bewildered eyes. She saw her husband.

"Go tell pap it's time fur us to go in," she said and breathlessly watched the child speed on his errand. He returned alone.

"Pap's treatin' the crowd," said the boy, his words drowned in a vociferous burst of applause from the tent.

"Stay here," commanded Jane, and went toward the hilarious group.

"Come, Jim," she said coaxingly, "an' take us into the show."

"I'll be along—plenty o' time," answered her husband, with that provokingly benignant good humor.

But he was deaf to her repeated entreaties. She stood watching him till the last dime was spent. Then she went back to the children. Something in her face awed them and they whispered among themselves.

"You pap's drunk and the money's all gone," said Jane with an air of indifference, and sat down on the grass.

The people were streaming out of the tent; the crowd was dispersing. One of the animal vans drew near. Jane crept up to the driver.

"Mister," she said in trembling tones, "won't you let the children take a peep? They never saw nuthin' in their lives."

"Boss wouldn't let me," answered the driver, yet not unkindly.

A white monkey thrust its paw through the slats in the cage.

The children were in estacies of delight. The driver started his horse.

"Come, children, let's go home," said Jane in a hopeless voice.

It was dark when they reached the cabin. A whippoorwill sang from the thicket, and its wail was to Jane Sheplas the knell of her lost hope.—Lippincott's Magazine.

THE KIND THAT CURES

WILLIAM I. ASH,
Malden, Mass.

"Heavy Deathly Feeling!"

A REMARKABLE CURE IN MALDEN, MASS.

"FROM THE FIRST DOSE I FELT BETTER!"

The following from one of Malden's reliable citizens, and certified to by the Manufacturing Firm of H. A. & F. I. Miner, that owns the TWO LEGG STORES at No. 29 and No. 255 Pleasant St., reads like a fairy tale, but "YET 'TIS TRUE, EVERY WORD OF IT."

DANA SARSAPARILLA CO.

GENTLEMEN:—About a year ago I was troubled with a HEAVY DEATHLY FEELING in my stomach, everything I ate caused severe distress.

I ordered your ad. in a Bangor paper and being a native of that place, and reading of the benefit old acquaintances had received from it, I secured a bottle of at Miners' Drug Store in this city, they being the only ones that kept it in stock at that time. Strange to say that FROM THE FIRST DOSE I FELT BETTER and continued to improve and after having two bottles I had a hearty appetite and could digest almost anything I ate. Have recommended it to at least a dozen friends, and all I have heard from, have derived great benefit from it.

Very truly yours, WM. I. ASH.

No. 1 Rockland Place, Malden, Mass.

We hereby certify that we sold Mr. Ash DANA'S SARSAPARILLA, and his statement we know to be true in every particular.

Very respectfully, H. A. & F. I. MINER.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as proprietary products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

A Friend

Wishes to speak through the Register of the beneficial results he has received from a regular use of AYER'S PILLS. He says: "I was feeling sick and tired and my stomach seemed all out of order. I tried a number of remedies, but none seemed to give me relief until I was induced to try the old reliable Ayer's Pills. I have taken only one box, but I feel like a new man. I think they are the most pleasant and easy to take of anything I ever used, being so finely sugar-coated that even a child will take them. I urge upon all who are of a laxative to try Ayer's Pills."—Boothbay (Me.) Register.

In Need

"Between the ages of five and fifteen I was troubled with a kind of salt rheum, or eruption, chiefly confined to the legs, and especially to the bend of the knee above the calf. Here running sores formed which would scab over, but would break immediately on moving the leg. My mother tried everything she could think of, but all was without avail. Although a child, I read in the papers about the beneficial effects of Ayer's Pills, and persuaded my mother to let me try them. With no great faith in the result, she procured and I began to use them, and soon noticed an improvement. Encouraged by this, I kept on till I took two boxes, when the sores disappeared and have never troubled me since."—H. Chipman, Real Estate Agent, Roanoke, Va.

Ayer's Pills

"I suffered for years from stomach and kidney troubles, causing very severe pains in various parts of the body. None of the remedies I tried afforded me any relief until I began taking Ayer's Pills, and was cured."—Wm. Goddard, Notary Public, Five Lakes, Mich.

Unsatisfied.

Why are we never satisfied
In this strange world of ours?
Why do the thorns so oft abide
Among the fairest flowers?

We may have talents one or two,
The world would call us blest;
But then our neighbor has a few
That we have not possessed.

And so we sit us down and sigh
For fame we cannot win,
Still dreaming that the "by and by"
Will bring our harvest in.

Although we have not tilled the soil
Or tended it with care,
We still expect without our toil
That flowers will flourish there.

And when life's summer passes by,
And we are still denied
The gift for which we vainly cry,
We die at last unsatisfied.

The gift or talent you possess,
Though seeming to your eyes
A thing so small and valueless,
Another heart might prize

And deem its lot a happy one
Could it but share with you
The talent that you fain would shun
Because you have not two.

Ye idlers in the world's great field,
Of workers we have need;
The richest soil will never yield
Unless we sow the seed.

Go forth! and let your light so shine,
Its bright rays multiplied
Will yield a harvest so divine
You shall at last be satisfied.

A MISADVENTURE.

A pale, pasty faced girl of 17 stood in the door of a cabin that clung to one of the mountainous hillsides in the wild regions of northeast Georgia.

A February rainstorm was pelting the sodden landscape. It had been continuous for two days, until the watercourses were out of bank and the fords impassable.

The girl's hair glistened with moisture. He faded calico dress was mud dyed to the knee, and her shoes were wet and ragged.

The cabin was weather stained and squatty. Mud and slush without and dirt within made the cheerless weather more forbidding, even to those accustomed to it.

The winter had been a hard one for the mountaineers. Snow during January had been followed with drenching rainstorms in February, until the earth was soaked and all outside work at a standstill.

The rippling stream at the base of the hill turned a small corn mill down the ravine, but now had grown to a mighty torrent that swept away mill, dam and four bays on the previous night. The rude bridge that spanned the stream at the head of the pond dissolved and also disappeared in the angry waters in the early morning. As the girl stood and listened, she heard shouts in the direction of the mill that brought animation to her dull, coarse features. She was afraid the old mill would go, and its disappearance meant much to her in her barren existence, beset with ignorance and poverty.

It was always a rude structure as she first remembered it—dark with age—and the fabric trembled as the millstones clattered round and round when the water was turned on, but she loved everything connected with it.

According to the custom of the county, she packed her grist to and fro on her shoulders, and while her corn waited its turn she wandered up and down the marsh to gather sweet bubby blossoms to perfume her few Sunday clothes, which she carried home tied in the corner of her apron.

In the early spring she watched for tassels on the alders and gathered redbud blooms for the homely pitcher on the shelf beside the clock.

The perch rose to bait freely as she fished in sheltered woods near the mill, where the scum and dirt made them a choice hiding place, and her bare feet were no strangers to the limpid stream on a hot midsummer's day as she waited for her sack of corn to be ground.

The mill belonged to a neighbor, but she had a lively interest in its fate for reasons thus apparent and perhaps for other's, yet to be explained.

Sarah Jane Smith, the homely daughter of homely parentage, belonged to a hardy race of Georgia people known in history as moonshiners. Old Man Smith had likely been able to escape the revenue during his troubled life, beset with poverty on one side and rheumatism on the other, but Sarah Jane understood the risks her "pap" ran and was well aware that he had been more than once excused from a term in Atlanta jail by assuming the role of a bedridden invalid when danger was near. This cry of "wolf" did not shut out the "insatiate archer," which, unlike the government officials, captured the aged moonshiner and transported him to his final bourne a year before our story opens.

Sarah lived alone with her widowed mother in the old cabin, but there were two married brothers near enough to be in hail, settled down on the mountain side, also in small cabins.

Nat Smith, the eldest, kept the mill, while Joe Smith was supposed to farm the land—scanty patches that belied the name of farm.

The mill had scant custom also, and crops were always a disappointment—half worked as they were, and through the prey of half starved cattle that hunger made tricky as well as voracious.

The "boys," as they were called by Sarah and her mother, owned a pair of stunted "steers" between them, and although they never refused to plow their mother's corn-patch—when the oxen were at home—yet the crop continually suffered for plowing, for the rude mountain cart made frequent trips abroad, with destination not clearly defined.

A few cabbages or potatoes or a scanty crate of chickens sufficed to begin a journey, and the "boys" went and came, with no question asked or answered by home folks.

Sarah and her mother hoed the corn and potatoes without a murmur of dissent, but their wants were few, and their neighbors were as poor as themselves.

Tobacco was the old woman's only luxury, and the girl had a little cheap finery that gladdened her heart when she attended the neighborly gatherings—that even the poorest are not denied.

The girl was, therefore, much troubled about the fate of the old mill, and she watched the somber sky in vain for a cessation of the rainstorms that darkened the landscape and increased in form at intervals during the entire morning on the day our story opens.

The roar of the torrent was sometimes mingled with thunder that rolled and echoed among the hills. A flash of lightning heralded a burst of raincloud that almost deadened the shouts of men down at the mill which Sarah sought to catch.

The girl could stand the suspense no longer. Turning from the open door she donned her father's old coat that had hung on the wall as a tribute to his memory ever since his death. Reaching up for his weather beaten wool hat she was ready to pull it down over her ears when her mother at the fire turned herself about and watched her preparations in amazement.

"Whar ye be a-goin', Sairy Jane?" queried she. "Don't yer kno' yer better not go out'n this yer rain?"

"Don't you trouble yo'self, mother," replied the girl. "I'm jes gwine down the road a piece. I'm purty certain Mat and Jo is tryin' their level bes' to keep that ol' mill from washin' away. I jes' can't rest 'nuther minit, thinkin' about what ther doin'. I'm that res'less I can't set down or tend to a blamed thing while it's rainin' this way. Ef ennybody stops here and axes to stay all night, be sure yer tell 'em no, kase the boys won't want nobody to see that barrel in the corndor. I wish to goodness the creek would run down so they could haul it to Jasper, but I don't believe it will run down in a week." With this she stepped out in the rain.

The wrinkled hag at the fireplace gave her pot of lye soap a thorough stirring, pouring in a gourd of hot lye to keep down the violent ebullition that had been taxing her skill for some hours, lighted her cob pipe and advanced to the door to close it.

She at first shut it as if to save the house with its mud stained planks from the dashing rain, although the moisture already reached to the farther wall, but reconsidering this apparent intention, she opened it wide again, as if to watch the agile steps of her young daughter as she sped along the path circling down the mountain toward the mill.

After the girl had disappeared from sight behind the thicket that intervened, her mother still lingered watching the somber clouds, occasionally stopping to press down the ashes in her pipe with her knobby, hard forefinger, puffing with renewed energy as the smoke curled about her sunken lips and blinking eyes.

As she loitered and puffed the sound of horses' feet aroused her, and to her dismay she saw five horsemen nearing the low fence that encircled the rude cabin. They came from an opposite direction to the path her daughter had taken. She divined they were seeking shelter from the storm, and she was also convinced that they had a motive for appearing in that hidden recess among the mountains in such numbers and formidable array.

At first she closed the door, resolving to refuse them entrance, but she quickly recollected there were reasons why they should not go to the mill for shelter at this particular juncture.

The mounted men picked their way across under brush and trunks of fallen trees and hallooed.

With the instinct of hunted animals the old crone caught up bedding and bedclothes from the rude pine bedstead and flung the whole over the barrel in the corner before she appeared at the door to answer their halloo. She looked about her as she stood in the middle of the floor to see that the barrel was hidden from view before she answered their second call and request for shelter from the storm.

At last she opened her lips to say, "And what do you uns want 'er me?"

"Can we shelter under your roof, madam, until this storm abates? We have been riding for some hours, and the creeks are so high it is dangerous to cross," rejoined a beetle browed man who sat on his horse like a cavalryman used to service. "We will not intrude on you a moment longer than the weather will permit, madam?"

She still hesitated with her permission, but a fresh downpour, accompanied with flashing lightning and deep thunder, made it unnecessary, and in less time than it take to write it they had hitched their horses and entered the cabin with dripping saddles and water soaked boots, excoriating the weather and other discomforts as they stood on the stones of the fireplace, redolent with the smell of strong soap and vile tobacco smoke.

They had the fire all to themselves. The woman seated herself on the bare rail of the dirty pine bedstead and looked sullenly at the intruders.

For a time the men conversed in low tones as they turned themselves before the fire and watched the steam rise from their wet garments.

Two chairs with cowskin bottoms and a short, narrow bench made up the sum total of such conveniences, but Mrs. Smith made no effort to appropriate one or the other for her own use.

As the wind moaned around the low cabin and the thunder shook the earth until it trembled, she sat with sphinxlike features on the narrow bedrail, near to the barrel that resembled a heap of well worn and grimy bedding, strangely out of order to the visitors at the fireplace.

The beetle browed man recovered his gallantry in due time and invited Mrs. Smith to come forward and sit in her accustomed chair by the fire, but a sulky negative was his only reward. His comrades nudged each other at his defeat, but they were too near their hostess to comment aloud upon any particular feature of the situation except to discuss the weather as the rain pattered on the roof and dashed down the stick and dirt chimney, bringing soot and ashes with it, as it sputtered on the redhot coals in front of them.

At one time the storm seemed to have slackened its fury. Two of the horsemen stepped to the door to see the prospects, but the black cloud had so nearly advanced to the zenith that they were met with a tempest of wind and hail on opening it that drove them inside instanter.

There was nothing therefore to do but wait, and the question became a serious one, for the afternoon was waning, and they might be even unable to regain their starting point of the forenoon if the high waters further increased before and behind them, as the weather indicated they must do.

And yet their inhospitable hostess sat there without a word of welcome or of any other sort of word whatever.

They were truly suspicioned by her to be revenue officers bent on nearer and closer inspection, and she had all she could manage to restrain her feelings and prevent self betrayal to these, her enemies. The poor creature was in a fearful state of mind. She was in hourly expectation of the daughter's return with no opportunity of warning her of the presence of the officers in the cabin. She could hear nothing but the roar of the rain on the roof when she listened, shut up in the dark room, only illumined by occasional flashes of lightning as she cowered on her hard seat in trembling fear.

Mrs. Smith was no novice in moonshine tactics, but she had never found herself exactly in such a trap before. She understood that the old mill covered a hidden distillery run by her sons and some of their neighbors. The flood was playing havoc with this illicit enterprise without doubt, but she knew her sons would risk life and limb to rescue the whisky made under so many difficulties. Her daughter's prolonged absence betokened ill tidings, and the poor distressed mother anticipated the worst. She would have braved the storm but for the concealed whisky barrel, to appease her fears as to the absent children, but she dared not forsake her post, for the odor of the barrel was even then present to her quick sense of smell.

She reviewed in mind the old times when her "man" dodged the "revenues" and hid out whisky. She recollected the unfortunates that went to Atlanta jail and then away off to Albany penitentiary.

"If Mat and Jo are tuk, how could me and Sairy Jane make out?" was the query that came up time and time again in her mind.

She listened for outside sounds with painful tension of her mental faculties, and directly she heard voices in the rear of the cabin that threw her into a tremor of apprehension. Sarah Jane was the more frequent speaker, and she interpreted her words to be reproaches for her brothers, but their exact import she could not comprehend clearly.

Just then our gallant horseman, pressed by a sense of duty, rose from his seat and standing in front of the woman he insisted she should not punish herself longer, but she must come to the fire and warm herself. "You are no doubt chilled through and through, madam, and I shall occupy a seat by you until you make yourself more comfortable and oblige me by going to your own fire."

To his surprise and to the great amusement of his less dignified comrades, the old woman threw her apron over her head a la affery and not only declined to speak, but to move an inch.

The officer, now in doubt as to her sanity, returned to the fire completely outdone and subdued by this refractory conduct, and he was glad to see the door open, which admitted the dripping Sarah Jane to her mother's gaze, if not to her relief of mind.

Jarah Jane, a true daughter of her mother, vouchsafed no word that was audible to the gentlemen, who bowed to her, rising from their seats, and their offer of both chairs to the incomer seemed to seal her tongue and incline her to select the bed rails for a seat as well as soaking garments as her choice. She huddled along to her mother's side, and the two presented a most enigmatical appearance to the lookers on—a picture of ignorant stupidity and lack of manners as they read it.

But there was a cessation of the storm at last. The wind reversed to the north, and a cold wave made itself felt to the shivering women in the cabin. The clouds began to fly upward, and the rain was over. A pale wintry sunshine came out in the west toward the setting.

The officers saddled their horses, and after consultation agreed to allow the beetle browed commander to make known their orders, which he did most heroically without receiving a word in reply—nothing but stares.

As they disappeared down the trail toward the mill the two women left their bedrail seats and drew near the fireplace without exchanging a word. Not until the soap had been stirred, fresh wood laid on, the chunks piled together and the elder woman's pipe relighted did she whisper inquiry, receiving her reply in whispers.

"Don't you be afraid, mar. Let 'm go long w'ere they are a-gwine. Joy go wid 'em and peace behind 'em. They ain't a-gwine to ketch Mat or Jo if they don't 'spicion 'hont dat barrel over in the corndor and come back here a-searchin' other people's houses."

"Didn't Mat an' Jo come 'long ez yer did jes' now, Sairy Jane?" asked her mother.

"Yes, to be shore they did. No need er stayin' down at the mill enny more. We seed the las' livin' thing do down stream 'fore we lef' thar. Mighty pity to see so much good licker get drownded out. Them boys worked like beavers to save it, but they jes' couldn't do it. Nothin' could stop that ole mill when it got started. I'm sorter glad the still is done gone, but Mat was a-tellin' me he was a-gwine ter carry that very barrel of licker over in the corndor to Jasper jis as quick as the creek runs down to buy another still as fur as it will go, and Josh Jones would trust him to pay for the balance when he made more licker to sell, but I tol' him I'd sure tap it at the bottom and let it run out 'fore I'd let him resk that danger agin, kase Jim Booker tol' me down thar when we was a-watchin' the mill go that he heard that Tom Haskin had done played spy and put the revenue on track of Mat and Jo. I be boun' them was the very men that have jes' left here—they look jes' like 'em."

"It made me mighty sorry to see all that good licker wasted when the still and mash went down stream, but I do b'lieve it war the bes' thing could er happen, Them five men would er tuk Mat and Jo and carried them to Atlanta as sure as gun's iron. I 'spize the whole kit and bilin of 'em. Licker and 'bacco is all that mount'in people have got to keep up their spirits when they is 'down in the mouth,' and them blasted ol' revenue is forever and tarnally a-meddlin' with 'em. Jes' to think them ol' revenue raskils was a-settin' up here and they could er kotch the whole bilin of us if they hadn't 'a' stopped out'n the rain, and we uns didn't know it."

"Say, captain, don't you think that knave of a Tom Haskins has led you a wild goose chase up here in the mountains? Not an ounce of whisky have we seen since we left Elijay day before yesterday.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 1, 1893.

ANOTHER of Uncle Sam's new cruisers has proved to be as speedy as any in the navies of the old world,—the Olympia, which has averaged 22.2 knots in a trial off the California coast.

DID you notice how the tariff schedule shocked New England? And it didn't take long to do it, either. Only a few minutes after it was announced on Monday the earthquake took place.

THE official figures of the last state election have been announced, and Mr. Greenhalge's plurality is 35,697, Mr. Wolcott for lieutenant governor receiving 1630 more votes than the head of the ticket.

THE hat shops in Danbury, Ct., are shut down and about 4000 operatives thrown out of employment until such time as the manufacturers can open the shops and have them free from the dictation of the labor unions.

FARMERS who own sheep will be interested in a decision of the supreme court recently made at Boston, that if sheep are attacked by a number of dogs the owner of any one of them is liable for the whole amount of the damage.

THERE is a prospect that the government may make its own postal cards, the printing being done by the bureau of engraving and printing. It is to be hoped that if such a move is made the public will be given a better quality of paper in the cards than it has been having for some time past.

IN New York city the other night a merchant at the opera house discovered through his opera glasses a man in the audience who had formerly been his bookkeeper and stolen $2800, defying detection and capture. By this means he was brought to justice. And still there are those who say the opera is productive of no good.

YESTERDAY was a delightful day for the Thanksgiving celebration, warm and pleasant, vastly unlike the day which is supposed to be typical of that time, with snowballing, skating, the merry jingle of sleigh bells, etc., and many an "oldest inhabitant" contrasted the day with the ones "when he was a boy," in the stories told the grandchildren after the Thanksgiving dinner or around the fireside in the evening.

As was suggested by Warden Bridges of the state prison, the custom of pardoning two life convicts on Thanksgiving Day was done away with this year. This does not mean that convicts will not be pardoned at all, but that it will be done in a quiet manner without the knowledge of the other prisoners. One who was sentenced 14 years ago was released Wednesday evening, and will return to his mother in Italy.

THE Knights of Labor held their annual meeting at Philadelphia last week, when serious charges of working against the good of the order were brought against Powderly, who has held the office of Grand Master Workman for years. He was re-elected, however, but resigned and is succeeded by J. R. Sovereign of Iowa. The order has been losing numbers rapidly of late years, and is not now the powerful factor in labor circles which it once was.

THE supreme court has declared constitutional the law which prohibited the sale of trout during certain seasons, even though the fish were raised by private individuals in artificial ponds. The case was brought by a man who wished to raise and sell trout at all seasons of the year. The court held that in including fish which were artificially raised or maintained the principle was the same as in legislation which forbade persons catching fish in streams which ran through their lands.

THERE could of course be but one ending to the strike among the employes on the Lehigh railroad. With the numbers of men out of employment who must obtain work at some wages or suffer for food, the strikers were bound from the start to be beaten, as they have been, the road now having trains running about as usual. It should be remembered that the strike was not for wages, but to force the company to recognize their grievance committee as a whole.

THERE are many people in Hampden county who would like to see Benjamin F. Burr of Ludlow elected to the vacancy on the board of county commissioners caused by the death of Mr. Bagg of West Springfield. At the time of Mr. Root's death a year ago many thought Mr. Burr would receive the appointment, but Mr. Brainerd of Palmer was the lucky one. Mr. Brainerd is now on the board by election, and as Mr. Burr has seen considerable service as special commissioner, his appointment would seem in order. Certainly a more thorough, honorable man could not be found, and he would give the county good service.

THE Amherst College senate has done the right thing in suspending several students proven guilty of looting depot restaurants on their way back from a football game a few weeks ago. The boys took whatever they found and wanted, including dishes and spoons, and made no offers of paying for it, practically "cleaning out" the places. No one will object to the college boys having a genuine good time, with all the boisterousness which that implies among college students, but when their fun reaches a point where it destroys property in defiance of the law or makes highwaymen of the participants, it is well to call a halt. A judge at Princeton, N. J., hit it right when he fined $100 each some students arraigned before him for hazing, characterizing their conduct as disgraceful and illegal, saying, "you call it hazing, but we call it riotous conduct."

THE strange fact of a man being so rich he didn't know what he was worth has been brought to light. During his life Jay Gould paid taxes on $500,000 of personal property, the amount he said he owned, and of course he was supposed to know and tell the truth about it. But after his death the probating of his will showed real and personal property to the amount of $72,000,000, and the tax commissioners levied the personal tax on the estate at $10,000,000. His sons protested and were given a chance to show wherein the commissioners were wrong, but failed, and now they propose to take the estate out of New York over into Tarrytown, where they doubtless intend to make the assessors think $500,000 of personal property is all the estate can afford to pay taxes on. It's queer what a lot of other rich men never know, or forget how much they are worth when it comes to paying taxes on their possessions.

THE new tariff schedule was made public Monday, the most striking features being the putting of wool, coal, iron ore, salt and lumber on the free list. Agricultural implements are also put on the free list, but a reduction is made in the duties on farm products. Raw sugar remains on the free list, and the duty on refined sugar is reduced from $\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ cent a pound. The bounty of two cents a pound enacted by the McKinley bill is reduced to $1\frac{3}{4}$ cents for the year 1894-5, and decreases $\frac{1}{4}$ cent each year, ceasing altogether in 1902. The duties on woolen goods, which range from 45 per cent on ready-made garments to 20 per cent on the lower grades of carpets, are arranged to be reduced by a sliding scale until at the end of five years the highest duty shall be but 40 per cent and the average 30. New England manufacturers are not pleased at the prospect for business if the bill passes. One manufacturer estimates that it will cost him $150,000 in diminished business, against which he will save $1200 on free Canadian coal, if it proves suitable for his business.

SCHOOL MATTERS.

Some Facts About the Schools.—Talk to the Teachers by Superintendent Small.

A new feature in the schools is the requiring of a monthly report from the teachers of the attendance, absences and cases of tardiness in each school. The figures for November and for the term just ended are given for the schools below the high school:

| | November. | Entire Term |
|---|---|---|
| Number of pupils | 843 | 843 |
| Average attendance | 780 | 758 |
| Per cent of attendance | 95 | 93.5 |
| Tardy marks | 317 | 891 |
| Pupils dismissed | 211 | 635 |
| Hours lost by dismissal | 198 | 679 |
| Days lost by tardiness | 739 | 2696 |

The schools having the best attendance for November were Mrs. Leach's, 99 per cent, only 5 days absence, and Miss M. T. Shea's, 98.8 per cent, $6\frac{1}{2}$ days absence. Both these schools are second and third grade. The general attendance for the month has been very good, only two schools having had less than 90 per cent attendance, Whiting 79 per cent; wire mill, 88 per cent.

There have been during the term eight teachers' meetings:—Two general meetings, on the first and last Friday afternoons, two for teachers of the first, second and third grades, two for teachers of the fourth to ninth grades, and two for district teachers. Each teacher has attended four meetings during the term. The meetings have been devoted largely to methods in English, including reading, spelling, writing and language. The aim in the reading is "thought getting," in the language, "thought expressing;" spelling and writing are the incidentals of the two. All other studies depend on getting the thought, and their recitations on expressing that thought. While other studies are attended to, the main work is being put on the English. Arithmetic has been emphasized in its business relations.

At the meeting last Friday Supt. Small gave a 40-minutes talk on "The Teacher as a Student." (1) Preparation for day's duties. (2) Reading for growth.

Preparation.—A teacher has no right to go before a class unprepared. You should have (1) Knowledge of the subject matter, (2) Knowledge of its presentation. Text book knowledge is not enough. You have no right to preach with the capital you had 1, 2, 3 or 10 years ago. There is no excuse for such carelessness or lack of scholarship as is indicated in a teacher's using double negatives, learn for preach, done for did; in inability to pronounce correctly words found in the spelling and reading lessons, and in inability to use correct arithmetical processes. Thoorugh preparation is needed. Weak spots of your work: Rote work, text book work, learning in place of teaching, not enough of teacher's personality. In discipline most mischief is due to idleness; make preparation for your pupils at their seat, as well as recitation. Dare to be ignorant of many things your pupils may ask you, but not of your regular daily work.

Study for growth.—Read for four things: (1) methods, (2) knowledge of child life, (3) principles and inspiration, (4) history of your work. Teachers generally cry for devices, and the weaker the teacher the louder the cry. Try methods. The difference: method is the principal covering a system of work. Why read methods? to know why changes have been made in school work, and how they are carried out. To know the difference between the old and the new. The old trained the memory, taught definitions, rules, problems; the new revises this, teaches methods, and deduces rules and definitions. The new trains pupil's thinking powers, judgment, self activity, educates them by doing. A teacher's constant question to self should be why. You see a device and wish to use it, why? What is its end, its purpose? Is it adapted to your work? Its effect on the child's mind? In geography, principles of physical geography first; why? Home surroundings before the text book; why? In arithmetic, business principles; why? In reading, thought getting; why? From a knowledge of principles and of the child's mental development, you can answer the whys. Much of pupils so-called stupidity is due to stupid teaching, because the whys were not asked nor answered.

Years of teaching are neither a mark of progress nor of value. Growth in teaching ability is the mark. Market value is increased by growth, by knowledge of your work, and there are six ways of growth: (1) Experience at the expense of your school, (2) conventions and institutes, (3) school visitation, (4) summer schools, (5) talks with teachers of wide experience, (6) reading. Winter is the working season. By reading one-half hour each day you can easily read five books this winter. Read for principles of education, for inspiration; a non-reading teacher loses the trend of educational thought, gets out of the step, falls to the rear and drops out. Reading takes the place of training and normal schools with some, and keeps alive those who had such a course. Books re-read after school experience have a new value. Read to avoid mistakes others have made; read to realize the importance of your position and your influence over child life.

The afternoon session will commence at 2 o'clock and the evening session at 7. Supper will be served at 6 o'clock by the members of the Ladies' Social Union. A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend.

Holden's opera house is being wired this week for electric lights. The new system will be a great deal more convenient to operate than the lights now in use. There are to be eight footlights, four in the flies above the stage, one in each of the four boxes, six on the lower floor, eight in the center chandelier and three or four in the lobby. The present oil system will be retained for use in case of necessity. The center lights will be wired to the present chandelier and those on the lower floor will be suspended from underneath the gallery. The new footlights were tried for the first time Wednesday evening at the production of "Tim, the Tinker," and gave good satisfaction.

Clifton Elmer, who has been the cause of trouble in the family of Newell Taylor, has left town, signifying his intention to go to sea. Elmer is about 18, and the son of Mr. Taylor's housekeeper, whose husband has secured a divorce from her on grounds of domestic infelicity, with the custody of the children, there being another boy a couple of years younger than Clifton. Clifton was left in Orange, but learning where his mother was came here and hired out under an assumed name. His father finally found where he was and brought suit against Taylor for abducting the boy, but it never came to trial. The father tried to collect the son's wages, but failed, and then persuaded him to go to Greenfield, but he soon returned. Elmer then notified the boy's employer that he should collect his wages, and the boy concluded that he would spend his money himself, so accordingly left for parts unknown.

Mrs. Eliza A. Holden gave her annual Thanksgiving dinner to the Holden family at the Converse House yesterday. Members of four generations to the number of 44 took places around the festive board, and a fine dinner was set before them by Landlord Pierce. Following are the names of those present: Mrs. Eliza A. Holden, Palmer; Charles L. Holden and wife, E. Shaw and wife, Irving Shaw, Alice Shaw, Lewis Holden and wife, Charles D. Holden, Bondsville; Henry P. Holden and wife, Henry L. Holden, George S. Holden and wife, Rosa Holden, Lizzie Holden, James Loomis Holden, Palmer; Frank B. Pope and wife, Lewis Pope, Olive Pope, Palmer; E. E. Hart, wife and babe, Hazel Hart, Hildreth Hart, Bennington, Vt.; Dana Buxton, wife and babe, Bessie Buxton, Bernice Buxton, Beatrice Buxton, Warner Buxton, Blanche Buxton, Springfield; Miss M. E. Holden, New York city.

The Quaboag Historical Circle entered upon its work Monday night with about 30 members, which augurs an auspicious future. The question, "Who were the first historic discoverers of America?" served as the topic of the evening. O. P. Allen opened the subject with a 40-minutes talk, giving first a resumé of the ideas of ithnologists regarding the aborigines of America; secondly, the views of the ancients regarding cosmography in general and of the unknown west in particular; then of the discovery of America by the Norsemen in the tenth century; fourth, the discovery of the new world by Columbus; and lastly, some of the lessons drawn from the epochs. Dr. Stowe and H. C. Strong followed with interesting remarks. Hereafter the meetings will be held Friday evenings, the next meeting occurring on the evening of Dec. 15, when Principal Thayer of the high school will open the meeting with an essay on the early settlements in Virginia and New England, with the types of character developed in each. Mrs. Auger will read the first number of the "Quaboag Round Table," which will be sustained by the members of the circle.

State Primary School Notes.

The Hospital Circle will give an entertainment to-morrow evening.

Among the recent visitors of the school have been Mr. and Mrs. George Royce of Brimfield, also Mrs. Nathan Green and Mrs. Gilbert Williams of Wales.

Miss Richardson spent Thanksgiving at her home in Gilbertville, Miss F. J. Dwyer spent the day with Miss Pearson in Springfield and Miss E. M. Fullington and Miss Mudge dined with Miss N. J. Rice at Hammond Hall, Monson.

In the preparation of Thanksgiving dinner for the children, the following articles were required: 200 pounds of roasting pork, 2 bushels potatoes, 2 bushels turnips, 2 bushels onions, 1 barrel squash, 97 mince pies.

Miss Fannie Richardson of Gilbertville is teacher in the kindergarten department, in place of Miss Pearson, who resigned to accept a similar position in New Haven, Ct. Miss Jennie Leonard of Oakham, Mass., is visiting in the girls' sewing room.

Church Notes.

At the Baptist church next Sunday the pastor will use for his text the eleventh commandment. The evening service will be at 7 o'clock, subject: "Pure and Undefiled Religion." Meeting for men only at 6 o'clock.

Rev. Herbert F. Moulton will deliver a sermon in St. Paul's church Sunday morning upon the "Christian Home, its Power and Influence."——The monthly meeting of the pastoral committees of St. Paul's church will be held next Monday evening instead of Tuesday, on account of the dedication of the Masonic Temple, which occurs on Tuesday evening.

"An Important Attempt" will be the Sunday morning subject at the Congregational church. In the evening the pastor will give "A Reading from Nature and Genesis." The "reading" will be preceded by a song service and brief devotional exercise.——All attendants at the Congregational church who can sing are invited to meet in the church tomorrow at 7 p. m. to rehearse for the song service Sunday evening, and to begin the rehearsal of a "Forefather's service," to be given soon.——The "Men's Sunday Evening Club" will hold its second meeting in the small audience room of the Congregational church next Sunday at 5.15 p. m. The object of the club is to promote the interests of the Sunday evening services. In connection with the pastor it will plan services of an attractive and helpful order, and will seek in all possible ways to make them a factor in the life of the community. All men interested are invited to become members of the club.

The Sunday school of the Union church provided a large quantity of viands and clothing for those who are in straitened circumstances in the village. The goods were distributed on Thanksgiving, to the gratification of many poor families.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Barker was the scene of a pleasant gathering yesterday, the event being a reunion of the Gilbert Barker family, which had not assembled for 43 years until yesterday, when three generations were represented, in all 18 persons, the only remaining members of this old family. Several of them were from Springfield and Boston, and one sister from Connecticut. The day was most happily spent, and will long be remembered by every one who was present.

A meeting of the A. O. U. W. was held Tuesday evening for the purpose of organizing the woman's auxiliary order, which has been under consideration for some time. The large attendance at the meeting showed that interest has not been lost in the movement, and about fifteen desired their names to be recorded as willing to become members when the necessary preliminaries have been performed. Two applications for membership in the A. O. U. W. were also received. After a repast had been served, remarks were made by Rev. G. H. Butler, R. C. Newell, Horace Paine and others, and a quartette from Thorndike pleased the company with some good selections. J. Needham's fine solos were also favorably received.

R. M. Reynolds continues to improve in health, and his ultimate recovery is now confidently looked for, at no distant date.

A few samples of spring goods are being made at the Reynolds new mill, but there is no prospect of the mill starting up again.

G. L. Keeney has forwarded his order for a new stock of drugs, etc., and expects to be fully ready for business again in a few days.

The Windsor Club has engaged quarters in the new bank block, and the furniture has been ordered, its arrival being daily expected.

When the "fairs" open next winter then you will know what has seemed a mystery about the sewing bees, and the fancy articles now being made up.

Westfield parties will be at the stable of Ralph Clifford this evening to complete the sale to a stock company of a Percheron stallion valued at $2500.

W. N. Flynt has just completed a large building for a museum at his park, and is furnishing it with many rare old pieces of furniture and curiosities.

The merchants are beginning to display appropriate goods for the holidays, and the children are speculating as to what Santa Claus has in store for them.

Miss Augusta E. Fay, who has been stopping with her sister, Mrs. Jones, at Waltham for some time, is at home at present, but will return to Waltham.

Miss Laura Sutcliffe has resigned her position as teacher in No. 6 school, and the place will be filled at the meeting of the school committee this evening.

The Ladies' Benevolent society of the Congregational church will have a sociable next Tuesday evening. The entertainment will consist of "Pictures from Life."

M. F. Connolly has decided to continue his tailoring business at his home on Bridge street. Orders may be left at Babbitt's store and will receive prompt attention.

Arthur Orcutt was surprised by a number of his friends Monday evening, the occasion being his 18th birthday. A watch charm was presented him by those present.

Heimann & Lichten have been paid the insurance on the burned boarding house,—$3000,—but will not repair the building, at least not this winter, and probably never.

There was only a medium-sized audience at the Methodist church Monday evening, at the entertainment given by the Gilbert family of jubilee singers, which was very good.

The cycling party which was entertained by Miss Alice Darling last Friday evening first took a run to Palmer, after which refreshments were served at Miss Darling's home.

The firemen have received a check for $50 from S. F. Cushman, and one for $25 from S. F. Cushman, Jr., for the good work rendered at the time of the burning of Central Block.

Additions to the employes at the straw shop of Heimann & Lichten are constantly being made, and the firm hopes to have the works running in full by the middle of the month.

Robert H. Cushman has been to Hyde Park this week to attend the funeral of John Scott, who died Monday at Philadelphia. Mr. Scott has frequently been in Monson, the guest of S. F. Cushman, Jr.

W. N. Flynt is laying a pipe from his new spring in the rear of William Smith's to the old Alanson Thompson place. It is probable that the pipe will be continued farther through the street in the spring.

Next Sunday at the Congregational church will be the beginning of the seventh year of the present pastorate, and Rev. Mr. Hatch will speak on the "Relation of the Minister to the Homes of the Community."

Liveryman Clifford is thinking of adding a sale stable to his already extensive business. He has sold nearly twenty horses this season. His last sale was his bay horse, "Sisson Boy," to Heimann & Lichten.

People who have been patriotic enough to effectually lick the 2 x 4 Columbian postage stamps for the past few months will be glad that the World's Fair is over, and the prospect favorable for a more convenient size.

A fire broke out about 5.30 Wednesday evening in the smoke box at the Reynolds straw shop, but was quickly extinguished by the employes, no alarm being sent out. The damage will not amount to much, probably not over $100.

The small boys have been diligent searching the cooling ruins of Central Block for pennies, and have found not a few under where the money drawers of the merchants were located. Several coins of larger denominations have also been found.

The academy closed Wednesday for the Thanksgiving vacation, to open again next Monday. Nearly all of the students have left town, only a few being left at Hammond Hall. The most of those were invited out to dinner yesterday, and those who were not had a special dinner with the matrons of the Hall.

The following children in the Green street primary school have been perfect in attendance during the past month: Mamie Bogan, Lizzie Bradway, Bertha Cantwell, Lizzie Hanson, Maggie Kearns, Alice Noble, Blanche Ritter, Grace Thayer, Ernest Aldrich, Frank Gath, Frank Holloway, Peter Kearns, Carl Rand. The following have been in school every day during the term. Lizzie Bradway, Bertha Cantwell, Anna Krause, Kittie O'Brien, Florence Parke, Jenny Prue, Blanche Ritter, Grace Thayer, Roscoe Adams, Willie Hines, Herbert Howe Peter Kearns, Bruno Krause, Carl Rand.

The customary union Thanksgiving service was held yesterday morning in the Congregational church, Rev. Mr. Hatch taking for his subject "Thanksgiving for a Conscience Vote." The points touched upon were: That there was a conscience vote, and that though sometimes mistaken on the whole its effect was for good government by rebuking the politician if inclined to go too far wrong, by keeping him careful, and thus elevating the standard of public service. There are two ways of strengthening the conscience vote, one by divorcing state and national from local issues, and the other by referring important measures more directly to the people.

HAMPDEN.

Stereopticon views of the World's Fair and scenes at Chicago were given in the Methodist church Monday evening, and were well attended.

Mr. and Mrs. E. K. Bradway have the sympathy of all in their affliction, two children having died with diphtheria, a four-years-old daughter on the 23d and a seven-months-old son on the 28th of November.

WALES.

The topic of conversation this week has been the leaving of Isaiah Hiscock by his wife, who has gone to Monson, to the home of her son by a former marriage. She is Mr. Hiscock's second wife, having married him about 15 years ago, 10 years after the death of his first wife. Her reason for the move is a claim that her husband has been spending too much of his money and time in the company of other females.

WEST WARREN.

Mills No. 2 and 3 begun to operate Monday.

Horace Coles is visiting his home in Cornish, Me.

Rufus Baker is spending Thanksgiving in Palmer.

Mrs. Will Nebert and daughter Kitty spent Thanksgiving in Taunton.

Rev. H. G. Alley of Belchertown preached in the M. E. church Tuesday evening.

The foot ball teams played a lively game on Crossman's lawn Thanksgiving Day morning.

Miss Minnie Brooks has resigned her school here and will take up her duties in a school at Webster.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Brooks and daughters, of Philadelphia, are visiting at Mr. Brooks's former home.

The usual number of bags and amount of money were sent to the Home for Little Wanderers at Boston for Thanksgiving.

BELCHERTOWN.

Rev. F. F. Thayer preached the Thanksgiving sermon this year.

The Young Men's Club held a dance in the Belcher House last evening.

Dr. and Mrs. Charles Walker, formerly of this place, are to make their home in South Pasadena, Cal.

D. P. Clapp left Monday for his home in New York. He is considering the question of spending the winter in Florida.

Senator G. H. B. Greene has gone to Chicago, having received word that his daughter, who went there some weeks ago, is very ill.

Jacob Foster died at his home in Mill Valley last Saturday morning of pneumonia, and the funeral was held from the residence Monday.

A large number of people in the town are sick with pneumonia, among them Mrs. Jacob Foster, Mrs. Henry Aldrich, Mason Sanford and Mr. Jackson.

Thieves removed the contents from the refrigerator of Mrs. Henry Gould a few days ago, and a half barrel of pork was also stolen from the cellar of J. R. Gould.

LUDLOW.

Misses Florence and Bernice Nash spent Thanksgiving with friends in Providence, R. I.

The people of Ludlow are anxious to have their townsman, B. F. Burr, appointed county commissioner in place of Mr. Bagg. They feel that he has every qualification necessary for the position.

A business meeting of the Christian Endeavor society was held at the house of E. N. Fisher Monday evening, also a meeting of the parish committee to see about painting the church, as S. J. Miller will give $50 providing the parish will raise $100.

The evangelists, Mr. and Mrs. Russell, who have been holding meetings the past two weeks with the churches at the Center, closed their labors last Sunday evening and returned to their home in Maine, in preparation for entering into other fields. While their labors have not been blessed with as many conversions as was hoped, yet the churches have been quickened to a new spiritual life, so that the good seed of the kingdom which they have sown is left now with the churches to reap the harvest. Mrs. Russell preached the farewell sermon Sunday evening from the words "For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" and held her audience closely through the whole discourse.

WILBRAHAM.

The personal property of Mowry Bros. will be sold at auction next Tuesday.

Athena society will hold an open session next Friday evening in Fisk Hall.

Ethelbert Bliss has had the foundation placed for a family monument in the old cemetery.

Frank Learned has sold his farm in Chicopee, this making two he has disposed of within a month.

The schools had a vacation of only two days, yesterday and to-day, the Christmas vacation to commence the 22d.

Union Thanksgiving services were held in the Methodist church yesterday forenoon, Rev. Alonzo White preaching the serman.

The annual open session of Old Club society was held in Fisk Hall last Friday evening with this programme: Music by the orchestra and prayer by Rev. F. Nichols; address of welcome, President T. G. Robbins; secretary's report, G. F. Cobb; vocal solo, "Fear ye not, O Israel," James Davies; "Resolved, That it is the duty of the patriotic citizen to observe party ties in municipal politics," affirmative, R. T. Jones, A. T. Davison; negative, M. E. Knight, H. L. Hannah. "Sheridan's Rivals," cast: G. W. Carman, B. G. Barton, G. I. Parker, R. H. Jones; "Evening Star," editors, H. E. Wright, J. D. Taylor; critic, J. C. von Bast; Old Club quartette, C. H. Davis, A. S. Webb, H. Burke, H. L. Davis.

WARREN.

The whooping cough is very prevalent in town.

The schools closed last Friday for a week's vacation.

Miss Emma Lincoln is visiting in Gloversville, N. Y.

Mrs. Whitney is the guest of Miss Mary S. Hitchcock.

Rev. H. G. Hale and wife are spending the week in Salem.

Wilson Fairbanks has moved into his new house on Main street.

Union Thanksgiving services were held in the Universalist church.

Joseph Hasting spent last Sabbath with Arthur Sibley in Holyoke.

Henry Powers and family have been visiting at his father's this week.

Frank Barnes and family of Fitchburg are the guests of Lyman Powers.

The Methodists still continue their meetings, which are well attended.

Miss May Powers of Boston spent Thanksgiving with Mrs. William Powers.

Dr. Robert W. Hastings of Boston spent Thanksgiving with his parents here.

Mrs. Guilbert and daughter have been spending a week with friends in Groton.

Rev. Mr. Gleason's only child died Tuesday. The funeral was held this morning.

The King's Daughters will meet with Miss Mary S. Hitchcock next Thursday afternoon.

Rev. D. O. Clark and family left Wednesday for Worcester, to be absent through the winter.

The Misses Ramsdell have been spending a few days in Holyoke, with Miss Ida Waller.

Mrs. A. W. Lincoln gave an "at home" Wednesday afternoon in honor of her mother's seventy-sixth birthday.

The King's Daughters have sent as a Thanksgiving offering to the sailors two boxes of books and magazines and comfort bags.

Rev. John T. Maddern, who has been pastor of the Catholic church here, has been removed to Webster, where he will begin his duties next Monday.

The Christian Endeavor society held a very pleasant social at the home of Miss Effie Fairbanks Monday evening. The entertainment was a book party, and was much enjoyed by all present.

BRIMFIELD.

The Center school has closed for a week's vacation.

Horatio L. Converse was able to be in his store Monday.

Miss Nellie Newell is visiting her brother in Southbridge.

Marshall Allen and bride of Worcester are the guests of Elijah Allen.

Dr. and Mrs. Ripley of Brockton are guests of Dr. and Mrs. R. V. Sawin.

Charles W. Harrison is on a vacation to his home in Litchfield, Ct., for a week.

Salem D. Charles of Boston ate turkey with Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bliss Thanksgiving Day.

Mrs. C. M. Wood of Melrose was a guest at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Janes this week.

Mr. Sparhawk, assistant teacher at the high school, is in Randolph, Ct., for a few days' vacation.

Mrs. Ed. Buxton returned to her home in Springfield Saturday, after a stay of two weeks in town.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Brown and children of Port Chester, N. Y., were guests of Mrs. Henry Brown last week.

Olin Booth, a former student of the high school here, but now of Amherst College, is visiting old friends here.

Mrs. Will A. Janes and Mrs. Albert Kyle rendered a fine duet during the morning service at the First church last Sunday.

Miss Minnie Corbin gave a party Monday evening to a few of her friends, singing and dancing being indulged in during the evening.

About 50 of the friends and neighbors gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Parker last Friday to celebrate their crystal wedding anniversary. Among the presents was an elegant easy chair.

Dancing parties seem to be the principal amusement at present. There was one at George Sherman's Nov. 17th, one at W. J. Easter's the 24th, at Wilbur Parker's the 27th, the Village Improvement Society held one at the town hall Tuesday evening, and Wednesday evening there was another in the same place.

The sad news of the death of Miss Bell M. Brown came to town last Thursday. The deceased was a highly esteemed young lady, a life resident of this town, an active member of the first church until within two years, since which she has resided in Maynard with her sister, Mrs. Marsh. The deceased has not been in good health for a year or more. The remains were brought to town Saturday for interment, services being held in the First church, Rev. Mr. Kyle officiating. There were many beautiful floral offerings.

A $2500 Fire.

About 10 o'clock Wednesday evening fire broke out in the barn of Francis E. Cook. Mr. Cook had barely time to save his horse, the other contents of the barn being quickly destroyed. The flames were also communicated to the house, that also being destroyed, only a part of the furniture being saved. The loss is $2500, insured for $600 on the house and $200 on the barn, through the William Lincoln agency of Warren.

A Supreme Court Decision which Interests Brimfield People.

A decision of the supreme court, which was handed down Wednesday, secures to the town library $2500 for the purchase of books, which has been in dispute by the heirs of the estate for a year and a half. Miss Ursula J. Shaw, a resident of Brimfield, died March 26, 1892, leaving among other bequests $2500 to the town library. The will was allowed by the probate court, but the decision was appealed from on the ground that the document was not duly executed by three competent witnesses; because of undue influence exercised by George M. Hitchcock, Delia A. Hitchcock and Mary B. Shaw; because the alleged will or some part thereof had been revoked by the testatrix during her lifetime. The will was executed March 26, 1887, at which time the testatrix was of sound mind. One of the witnesses to the instrument was George F. Chamberlain, an inhabitant and taxpayer in Brimfield; another witness was H. A. Chamberlain, an inhabitant but not a taxpayer in Brimfield; Mary B. Shaw was not then an inhabitant or taxpayer in Brimfield, but afterward became a resident of the place. It was claimed that these witnesses were not competent because they as residents of Brimfield were directly interested under the will, but the court decided that their interest was so remote that they were competent witnesses.

WARE.

There has been a sound-proof booth put in the telephone office this week, adding greatly to the comfort of the patrons.

J. E. Priest of the Ware Steam Laundry will issue an advertising card next week which is sure to be long remembered.

The next regular meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held in the chapel next Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Edward H. Gilbert, of Ware, has been elected a vice president of the Yale Alumni Association of Central and Western Massachusetts.

Louis Picard, an insane pauper at Northampton, as well as his family, will no longer be supported by Ware, it having been discovered that he belongs to Spencer.

The new tariff bill just published does not offer a very promising outlook for the industries of Ware. If the bill is passed it is said to mean a 25 per cent reduction in wages.

Dr. Winslor Jones has posted notices that he will treat patients having chronic or acute diseases for the next four months, for $8 a month, and furnish all necessary medicine.

There is to be an enjoyable entertainment at the East Congregational chapel next Wednesday evening, when the Junior Endeavor Society will give a "Sunflower Chorus," and the Y. P. S. C. E. will serve a Columbian supper.

The Ladies' Society of Ware Center has elected the following officers: President, Mrs. D. Buffington; vice president, Mrs. J. W. Cummings; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. J. P. Harvey. A $75 mission box has just been sent away by this society.

The town meeting was more harmonious than some had expected. F. D. Gilmore, town treasurer, gave a statement of the finances of the town, and after some discussion the following votes were passed: That the treasurer of the town be hereby authorized to use any funds in his hands belonging to the town, which he can legally use, not including the high school building and water funds, in payment of the liabilities of the town as they become due; that the town treasurer, with the approval of the board of selectmen, be authorized to borrow the sum of $8000, or such a part thereof as may be needed, to be used for the purpose of defraying the expense occurred in the construction of the new bridge over Ware river, near Gibbs crossing, for the support of the town's poor, for highways, for grading the lot about the new high school building, for school incidentals and for other municipal purposes; payable in five years from date of borrowing, in proportional annual payments, at a rate of interest not exceeding six per cent per annum, and issue notes of the town therefor.

A grand game of foot ball was played on the pumping station grounds yesterday afternoon, between the Young Men's Union and Ware high school teams. The Wares won the toss and took the ball. They gained 7 yards on a revolving wedge, in the next four downs could only gain three yards, but were awarded five for off-side playing; not gaining the necessary five yards in the next four downs they were obliged to give up the ball. The Unions started with a wedge but lost the ball and Clark fell on it. On the next play Meldrum made a magnificent run around left end for a touch-down; no goal was kicked, time being called. The second half opened with the Unions having the ball and by a series of wedges they got it to the 3 yard line; on the next play Moran dropped the ball which rolled over the goal line, where Carroll dropped on it, but the referee did not see it, and decided a touch-down for the Unions; no goal kicked. With the ball in the center of the field the referee called play and the Ware Highs catching the Unions napping sent Clark down to the lines for a touch-down; a clean steal; Kennedy kicked a goal and the game was finished. Score, Ware High Schools, 10; Young Men's Union, 4. Touch-downs, Meldrum, Danihy and Clark; goal, Kenedy; umpire, G. Walter Reilly; referee, Frank A. Spencer.

Physicians universally recommend Ayer's Hygienic Coffee.

If the hair is falling out or turning gray, requiring a stimulant with nourishing and coloring food, Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer is just the specific.

For pity's sake, don't growl and grumble because you are troubled with indigestion. No good was ever effected by snarling and fretting. Be a man (unless you happen to be a woman), and take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which will relieve you, whether man or woman.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

Thousands of lives are saved annually by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. In the treatment of croup and whooping cough the Pectoral has a most marvellous effect. It allays inflammation, frees the obstructed air passages, and controls the desire to cough.

Relief for Rheumatism.

"This information," said a well known physician to a correspondent of the TELEGRAM, "may save many lives; at any rate it will prove an invaluable boon to people suffering from rheumatism in any form."

"Rheumatism is caused by acidity of the blood. It should never be neglected. This remedy, as I know by long practice, is very efficacious, and it is as simple as it is powerful.

"Here it is," he added: "When a rheumatic twinge is experienced, the patient should buy a bottle of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and take one teaspoonful in one-half glass of hot or cold water as best suits the action of the bowels, three times a day, and continue the same daily until the last vestige of the malady has disappeared. That is all there is to it, but it taken as I have prescribed, it will save suffering humanity many doctors' bills, to say nothing of pains, aches and swellings. I've never known it to fail."—Albany N. Y., Telegram.

EPPS'S COCOA

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided for breakfast and supper a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We can escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette. Made simply with boiling water or milk. ## SURROUNDED BY MYSTERY!

A Great Mistake.

A recent discovery is that headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion of the mind, etc., are due to derangement of the nerve centers which supply the brain with nerve force; that indigestion, dyspepsia, neuralgia, wind in stomach, etc., arise from the derangement of the nerve centers supplying these organs with nerve fluid or force. This is likewise true of many diseases of the heart and lungs. The nerve system is like a telegraph system, as will be seen by the accompanying cut. The little white lines are the nerves which convey the nerve force from the nerve centers to every part of the body, just as the electric current is conveyed along the telegraph wires to every station, large or small. Ordinary physicians fail to regard this fact; instead of treating the nerve centers for the cause of the disorders arising therefrom they treat the part affected.

Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., the highly celebrated specialist and student of nervous diseases, and author of many noted treatises on the latter subject, long since realized the truth of the first statement, and his Restorative Nervine is prepared on that principle. Its success in curing all diseases arising from derangement of the nervous system is wonderful, as tae thousands of unsolicited testimonials in possession of the company manufacturing the remedy amply prove.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is a reliable remedy for all nervous diseases, such as headache, nervous debility, prostration, sleeplessness, dizziness hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

Restorative Nervine positively contains no opiates or dangerous drugs.

Ode.

[Read by DR. N. W. RAND, at the banquet of the Worcester County Homeopathic Medical Society, Worcester, November 8th, 1893.]

I.

I wish I might bring you the song you invite,
But really don't see how I can;
The fastidious muse
Is so sure to refuse
The suit of a medical man.

She likes men of leisure, of culture, and means,
The litterateurs and their clan;
But her shoulders she shrugs
At the smell of the drugs
That clings to the medical man.

She dotes upon diadems, banners, and swords
A-gleam on the front of the van;
But there's scorn in the glances
She casts at the lances
And probes of the medical man.

She's a lover of music in mountain, or sea,
Cathedral or gilded divan;
But she shrinks from the moanings,
The shrieks, and the groanings,
That surge round the medical man.

For she only loves pleasure, and will not consent
To abide with a doctor, because
He has nothing to share
But interminate care,
And his door-bell at night she abhors.

"But she smiled on a Holland, and Holmes," do you say?
Well—now let me tell you, the fact is
She smiled upon neither,
Nor listened to either,
Till both had said a good-bye to his practice.

And since 'tis her way to make such display
Of abhorance for doctors about her,
Let us try for awhile
The chagrin to beguile,
And get on to-day, friends, without her.

II.

We are the sons of Hahnemann,
And of Hippocrates;
We boast a royal heritage
Alike from both of these;
We brook no limit to the means
We use to heal disease;
For we are the sons of Hanemann,
And of Hippocrates.

No grander line of heraldry
Was ever known to man;
For with Apollo's noblest son
Our lineage began.
Apollo's son,
On Pelion,
In Chiron's mystic cave,
With all the gods in council met,
And planned the art to save.
And since that glad auspicious day,
Physicians of renown
From age to age the priceless boon
To us have handed down.
Their deeds are written everywhere
The thought of man is rife—
In earth, in ocean, and in air,
And in each form of life.
Our very frames,
With deathless names
On tablets fit, are stored,
From great Herophilus's press
Down to Achilles' cord.
We own them all, the glorious host,
In spite of schools or sects,—
Our Mortons, Harveys, Jenners, Kochs,
Our Listers and Laennecs;
We rise above each petty feud
Our better natures ban,
And claim a royal brotherhood
With every worthy man.
To any one
Who well has done
We'll honor not refuse,
From Celsus down to Sydenham,
From Sydenham to Hughes.
And here we raise
A song of praise
To all who heal disease;
For they are kin to Hahnemann,
And to Hippocrates.

III.

Great Nature was their mother,
Their teacher, and their friend;
And we upon no other
Authority depend.
Books writ by men
Of cunning pen
'Tis ours to compare
With her great book, and disregard
All found unwritten there.
It is ours to seek the relation
Of life to her changeless plan,
And apply the interpretation
Of her laws to the weal of man:—

To ask of the winds of heaven:
"What secrets have ye to tell
Of the climes of earth ye have traversed,
Of ocean, or mount, or dell,
Of forest, or fen, or fountain,
That can make our brothers well?"

To say to the rocks beneath us,
The sea, and the mountain ore:
"What treasures can ye bequeath us,
From your exhaustless store,
What mystical powers of matter,
O tell us, we implore,
That may bring a balm to sickness,
And strength to the weak restore?"

To question the herbs, and grasses,
That in the mould have birth,
And the trees, and vines, and mosses,
That drink of the milk of earth:
"What anodynes, what tonics,
Do your alembics know
That can strength impart
To a fainting heart,
Or quiet a fevered brow?"

To call to the myriad creatures
That throng the land and sea,
And the very air above us:
"What medicines have ye
From the elements selected
That may of service be
In bringing relief
To the pain and grief
Of frail humanity?"

Then to the mind immortal
'Tis ours to appeal,
That the touch of the spirit's seeptre
Defects of the flesh may heal:
"Ye forces within and around us,
Mysteriously given,
Intangible, inviolable,
Invincible as heaven,—
Say, what can ye do for a soul distraught,
For a system of nerves unstrung,
For a heart oppressed, or a brain o'er-wrought,
Or a body with anguish wrung—
Say, what can ye do where strength is naught,
And hope to the winds is flung?"

Thus do we question Nature,
Question, at every turn,
While she, with marvelous patience,
Still bids us trust and learn;
For O! she is kind to her children,
And, if we could only know,
She holds a relief
For every grief,
And a balm for every woe.
If only we knew the secrets
That lurk in her hidden power,
We could baffle death
Till the latest breath
Of age's frosty hour,
And then, as fall the autumn leaves,
Or petals of the rose;
Mankind, content
With days full-spent,
Would welcome death's repose.
But we are only children
Gathered around the knees
Of Nature—wondrous teacher!—
Conning our A, B, C's;
And now she bids us onward
To grander things than these,
For we are sons of Hahnemann,
And of Hippocrates.

IV.

Ah! woe to him who rests secure
In a little knowledge gained,
Who heeds not the fathomless height and depth,
Who heeds not the measureless length and breadth
Of the vast unattained!
And woe, if we
Content should be
With the trifles we comprehend;
Since life, with all that one can see
Of its stupendous mystery—
Of things that are, and are to be—
Is ours to defend;
Ours—its two great portals
Swinging to chime, and knell!
Ours—the primal welcome!
Ours—the last farewell!

V.

O the changes man will see
When Truth shall come!
Doctors then will all agree,
Nurses teachable will be,
Patients uncomplainingly
Bide whate'er the fates decree.

There will be no selfish scheming
When Truth shall come.
There will be no fruitless dreaming,
No seductive empty seeming,
No deceipt, nor disesteeming
When Truth shall come.

Theories the wisps may take
When Truth shall come.
Facts will base of action make,
Facts—however tenets shake,
Thrones decline, or altars break,
Men will hold and ne'er forsake,
When Truth shall come.

Wisdom, purity, and love,
Every link of thought shall prove,
Every line of conduct move,
As within the home above,
When Truth shall come.

And she's coming. E'en now, lo!
Yonder skies begin to glow.
Nay, 'tis not the boreal light
Streaming from its arctic height,
That were not so clear and white.
Lis! O list! A song! A song
Thrills the track she sweeps along.
List! The voice doth seem to say:

"Sons of earth, prepare the way,
I come!
Wreathe the laurel! Bind the bay!
I come! I come!
From the realms of peace supernal,
From the throne of The Eternal,
Downward where the earth's diurnal
Darkling walk is called a day—
When the people grope in darkness,
Grope, and call the darkness day—
Lo, I come!
And my progress none shall stay;
Haste, O earth, prepare the way,
I come! I come!

O the rapture of the flight
As I come—
From the empyrean height,
Out of radiance, into night,
Swiftly come!
Onward, onward, now I fly
Till methinks I can descry,
Through the gloom,
Shadowings of the nether sky;
And ten thousand voices cry,
From the worlds I'm sweeping by,
'HAIL! THE DAWN TO EARTH DRAWS NIGH!
TRUTH IS COME!' "

BILLY'S INDEPENDENCE.

"Does your mother boss you much?"

"Yes, she just follows a fellow up the whole time. The way she does makes me tired. I wish she would let me alone."

"That's what I wish, too, Now about this Fourth of July business. I don't see how we are going to have any fun at all. You see, a woman doesn't know what fun is, in the first place, and she is bound to object to anything boys call fun."

"How about your governor?"

"Father? Oh, he's after me, too, right smart. You'd think that fathers would know better about boys, from having been boys themselves, but they forget everything except the tricks. They find them out every time, sure pop."

"It's pretty tough. They won't let me have a gun, not even a pistol, think it queer I spend so much money on ice-cream and soda-water, say it's all nonsense to put up a pile of money on fireworks, think I ought never to forget anything, and just be a born 'prig.' "

"The Fourth is Independence Day. Let's strike for our liberties!"

"Good, I am with you."

"How shall we do it?"

"You tell."

"Easier said than done."

Billy Mason gave a long, low whistle, shifted on the fence-rail where he and his friend, George Bass, were sitting, then concluded: "Let's declare our independence first, then take the liberty."

"All right, that's fair. I'll do it. That means we will say we want to do as we please on the Fourth, and that we mean to; or words to that effect!"

"Go gently. We shall be sure to have trouble if we are too fresh. Fact is, the folks usually plan a lark of some kind for the Fourth. Come to think of it I am not sure but that I had better fall in with the rest."

"Pshaw, now you be firm in our own causse We must begin right off, too."

"Well here goes, then," said Billy, slipping down from the fence, and striking an attitude: "Whereas, when in the course of human events it becomes neccessary to, etc., etc. Three cheers for liberty!"

Hearty applause by Mr. Mason, who had just come up, took the boys by surprise.

"Good!" he exclaimed. "Are you rehearsing for the celebration?"

The boys looked a trifle sheepish, and cooled down somewhat. Mr. Mason knew there was something in the wind. He asked no questions, however; but as he and Billy walked on toward home together, he tried to draw him out a little as to his plans. As he did so, he realized how rarely he came in touch with his boy, and quietly resolved to become better acquainted with him, and win his confidence. This could not be done at once, and he only succeeded this time so far as to discover that Billy was very anxious and determined to have his own way.

"I'll tell you what, Billy," said his father, as they reached the house, "I have some plans for the Fourth as well as you. Suppose we talk them over together this evening."

Billy winced. Well enough he knew that the only right thing to do was to respond to his father's suggestion, but what would the boys say? There was more power in that, after all. He had so long heeded what the boys said, he had not the courage to back out from them now; so after supper, when George whistled, he said something about stepping out for a moment, and joined his companions, not returning till late in the evening.

Mr. Mason was a little hurt by this, and he and his wife had a long, serious talk as to what could be done to interest their boy, for they had no dearer object in life than his welfare. First they talked over a plan for a charming little trip of a week, then a camping party, then a lawn fete. Finally they concluded that probably any of these things would only make him more selfish and discontented; for he had of late been too much inclined to find fault, to rebel, and to make himself generally disagreeable. Perhaps it would be a good idea to give him his own way for a while, and let him learn his own foolishness by experience. Consequently, the next morning Mr. Mason said:

"Well, my son, I presume you arranged all your affairs to your own satisfaction last evening. Your mother and I have made our plans so they will not interfere at all, I think We shall leave town for a week or so, as we think it always pleasant to have a little change at this season. Of course, you would prefer to board, and be perfectly independent, so we shall close the house, and give the servants a vacation. We leave to-morrow. You do your packing, etc., to-day."

Poor Billy felt as though the earth had slipped away from him, somehow. In spite of the bracing the boys had given him the previous evening he had almost half made up his mind to come around to his father, so he felt a little dazed now. However, he swelled with pride to think how he could lord it over the other boys, who were anticipating some difficulty in getting their liberty.

When he really came to make his definite plans, he was not a little puzzled as to several points. What clothes should he pack? What things would he want? Above all, where should he go? He sought counsel several times of his mother, but she seemed entirely indifferent, absorbed in her own affairs. She only replied: "You know best, Billy. It is so good for you to be entirely independent."

His father had given him fifteen dollars which was to cover his entire expenses for ten days. This seemed a fortune. He considered the question of boarding at the hotel, thinking it would impress the boys; but on ascertaining that the lowest price was one dollar and a half per day, he concluded that he would prefer the "European plan." That would be better, anyway. He could have just what he wanted, and all he wanted.

It did seem very queer to be left all to himself the next morning, after saying "goodbye" to his father and mother. He felt a little sober, and he thought they looked so, too; but he put a bold face on the situation, and went to several stores to look at things he thought of buying, for he felt that fifteen dollars would get almost everything he wanted. He was a little chagrined to find he couldn't afford to get the gun he desired, but consoled himself by ordering all the fire-works he wanted. He didn't ask the price of anything, that was such a "small" way of doing; he simply selected and ordered, telling the dealer to make out the bill, and he would pay it when he called for the goods. He had intended to have the goods sent, but he suddenly realized that he had no address to give, as he had not yet settled where he would stay.

It was dinner time. He knew that pretty well by his feeling. He would just drop into the "Columbia" restaurant for this meal. It was a great relief not to be told to wash his hands, or comb his hair, or to observe various matters of table etiquette that his "cranky" parents insisted upon. He ordered soup, roast lamb, peas, mashed potatoes, croquettes, a glass of cream, strawberry short-cake and ice-cream. He ate it all, and felt "real good." He was just considering how much better it was to have such a meal than the simpler one his mother usually provided at noon, when he glanced at the bill—$1.25—goodness, that was a mistake! No, it was all straight. Well, he had better go to the hotel at once. But no, he couldn't do it. What should he do? Of all things he couldn't think of going to a cheap boarding-house. Never mind, he would attend the matinee later in the day; so he paid his bill and walked out. Going into a large store to look at a handsome pocket-book, he was attracted by some very sweet music-boxes. The clerk was a good salesman, and he "sold" Billy. He was persuaded to consider what a beautiful entertainment it would afford the boys at his room, and then what a fine present it would be for his mother on her return. She would be delighted with it, and with her son's thoughtfulness. He bought it, and paid for it—only three dollars. Where should it be sent! Well, never mind; he would call for it about six o'clock.

This room matter must be settled. Walking up a side street he noticed a card—"Furnished Rooms." Going in, he found an old lady who agreed to let him have a room for ten days for two dollars. So he paid in advance, and went to get his baggage. He gave several of the boys his address, inviting them to drop in that evening. How fine such independence was! No one to interfere. The room was rather small; there was nothing in it but a single bed and wash-stand with a newspaper cover, and a chair, and when he had added his trunk, the music box, and the package of fireworks—which, by the way was not as surprisingly large as the bill—when all these things were entered, there was not as much room as might be desired for company. But they came all the same; lots of them, till the landlady came up and said she did not keep a reception house, and would the young gentlemen please step down. This was dreadfully mortifying. However, Billy kept George all night, that they might get up early in the morning of the great Independence Day to fire their crackers. This fun was objected to by some of the lodgers, and the objection was sustained by the landlady, who, later in the day, declared she would not have fire-works in the house, and bundled the whole lot out of the window, which occasioned an explosion, calling out the fire department, and threatening arrest for the unhappy owner.

George offered hospitality for the outcast, who consoled himself by giving a soda-water treat all around. They went to the park to see the celebration that evening, but there was an awful crowd, and not much fun. The night was spent with George. After the breakfast next morning, there was nothing said about his staying any longer, and he did not know what in the world to do. Of course he had plenty of friends, but he did not feel like begging hospitality. A new light had come to him in a conversation he had overheard between George's father and mother.

"Where in the world are that boy's parents?"

"Gone off for a trip."

"Who is taking care of him?"

"He is taking care of himself."

"Queer! Let him do it then. I see no reason why we should be bothered with him. The place for children is at home."

Billy's last quarter was spent on the fifth day of his "independence." His best suit was nearly ruined, for he had worn it indiscriminately. He was dirty and utterly forlorn. What joy it would be if he could only go home, and have his father make him do something, and have his mother take care of him. Oh dear!

Uncle Hugh had been let into the plot, and commissioned to keep a quiet eye on the boy and not let him suffer. Meeting Billy in his dejection, he saw his time had come, so he offered to give him some work by which he could earn his living till his father and mother should return from their holiday.

Thus, Mr. Independence, after having learned the lesson of how easily money goes, had the opportunity of realizing how hard it comes. The whole experience was a lesson remembered all his life, and now he would like to have all the boys understand that "being bossed" by your father and mother, and being under home restriction, is on the whole the best thing in the world for a fellow.

True independence is having the right to do right, and not to do just as you please without regard to the rights of others.—Hal Owen, in the Woman's Home Journal.

Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

AYER'S

Cherry Pectoral

Has no equal for the prompt relief and speedy cure of Colds, Coughs, Croup, Hoarseness, Loss of Voice, Preachers' Sore Throat, Asthma, Bronchitis, La Grippe, and other derangements of the throat and lungs. The best known cough cure in the world, it is recommended by eminent physicians, and is the favorite preparation with singers, actors, preachers and teachers. It soothes the inflamed membrane, loosens the phlegm, stops coughing, and induces repose.

AYER'S

Cherry Pectoral

Taken for consumption, in its early stages, checks further progress of the disease, and even in the latter stages it eases the distressing cough and promotes refreshing sleep. It is agreeable to the taste, needs but small doses, and does not interfere with digestion or any of the regular organic functions. As an emergency medicine, every household should be provided with Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

"Having used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for many years, I can confidently recommend it for all the complaints it is claimed to cure. Its sale is increasing yearly with me, and my customers think this preparation has no equal as a cough cure."—S. W. Parent, Queensbury, N. B.

Her Best.

Have you noticed the change it sometimes makes
In a woman's face—
Passive it may be, and dull and cold,
Neutral-tinted and commonplace—
When the sun falls on it? How swift it takes Meaning and color and soft outlines?
How strange new lights from the eyes will slip,
And new tints blossom on cheek and lip?
The whole face softens and warms and shines,
And the hair, a miser grown overbold,
Shows forth, of a sudden, undreamed-of gold.
Oh, there's many a woman, east and west,
Must be in the sunshine to look her best!

Have you ever noticed the change it makes
In a woman's face
And her heart and her life that were cold and dull
And slightly inclined to commonplace,
When love shines on them? How there breaks
Over her nature a wave of gold,
Bringing out beauty unknown before,
Mellowing, widening more and more,
Lifting her up till her eyes behold
Ever new blooms for her hands to cull,
So she and her life grow beautiful?
Oh, there's never a woman, east or west,
But must live in Love's sunshine to live her best!

—Clara W. Bronson.

MY STOWAWAY.

"Ye can play yer jokes on Nature,
An' play 'em slick;
She'll grin a grin, but, land sakes, friend,
Look out fer the kick."

One night about 11 o'clock I stood at the stern of that fine Atlantic steamship, the City of Venice, which was ploughing its way through the darkness towards America. I leaned on the rounded bulwark and enjoyed a smoke, as I gazed on the luminous trail the wheel was making on the quiet sea. Some one touched me on the shoulder, saying, "Beg pardon, sir;" and, on straightening up, I saw in the dim light a man whom at first I took to be one of the steerage passengers. I thought he wanted to get past me, for the room was rather restricted in the passage between the aft wheel-house and the stern, and I moved aside. The man looked hurriedly to one side and then the other, and, approaching, said in a whisper, "I'm starving, sir!"

"Why don't you go and get something to eat, then? Don't they give you plenty forward?"

"I suppose they do, sir; but I'm a stowaway. I got on at Liverpool. What little I took with me is gone, and for two days I've had nothing."

"Come with me. I'll take you to the steward, he'll fix you all right."

"Oh, no, no, no," he cried, trembling with excitement. "If you speak to any of the officers or crew I'm lost. I assure you, sir, I'm an honest man; I am, indeed, sir. It's the old story—nothing but starvation at home, so my only chance seemed to be to get this way to America. If I'm caught I shall get dreadful usage and will be taken back and put in jail."

"Oh, you're mistaken. The officers are all courteous gentlemen."

"Yes, to you cabin passengers they are. But to a stowaway—that's a different matter. If you can't help me, sir, please don't inform on me."

"How can I help you but by speaking to the captain or purser?"

"Get me a morsel to eat."

"Where were you hid?"

"Right here, sir, in this place," and he put his hand on the square deck edifice beside us. This seemed to be a spare wheel-house, used if anything went wrong with the one in front. It had a door on each side, and there were windows all round it. At present it was piled full of cane folding steamer-chairs and other odds and ends.

"I crawl in between the chairs and the wall and get under that piece of tarpaulin."

"Well, you're sure of being caught, for the first fine day all these chairs will be taken out and the deck steward can't miss you."

The man sighed as I said this and admitted the chances were against him. Then, starting up, he cried, "Poverty is the great crime. If I had stolen some one else's money I would have been able to take cabin passage instead of—"

"If you weren't caught."

"Well, if I were caught, what then? I would be well fed and taken care of."

"Oh, they'd take care of you."

"The waste food in this great ship would feed a hundred hungry wretches like me! Does my presence keep the steamer back a moment of time? No. Well, who is harmed by my trying to better myself in a new world? No one. I am begging for a crust from the lavish plenty, all because I am struggling to be honest. It is only when I become a thief that I am out of danger of starvation—caught or free."

"There, there; don't speak so loud or you'll have some one here. You hang round and I'll bring you some provender. What would you like to have? Poached eggs or toast, roast turkey, or—"

The wretch sank down at my feet as I said this, and recognizing the cruelty of it, I hurried down into the saloon and hunted up a steward who had not yet turned in.

"Steward," I said, "can you get me a few sandwiches or anything to eat at this late hour?"

"Yessir, certainly, sir; beef or 'am, sir?"

"Both, and a cup of coffee, please."

"Well, sir, I'm afraid there's no coffee, sir; but I could make you a pot of tea in a moment, sir."

"All right, and bring them to my room, please?"

"Yessir."

In a very short time there was that faint steward rap at the stateroom door, and a most appetizing tray-load was respectfully placed at my service.

When the waiter had gone I hurried up the companion way with much the air of a man who is stealing fowls, and I found my stowaway just in the position I had left him.

"Now, pitch in," I said. "I'll stand guard forward here, and if you hear me cough, strike for cover. I'll explain the tray matter if it's found."

He simply said "Thank you, sir," and I went forward. When I came back the tray had been swept clean the teapot emptied. My stowaway was making for his den when I said, "How about to-morrow?"

He answered, "This'll do me for a couple of days."

"Nonsense. I'll have a square meal for you here in the corner of this wheel-house so that you can get at it without trouble. I'll leave it about this time to-morrow night."

"You won't tell anyone, anyone at all, sir?"

"No. At least, I'll think over the matter, and if I see a way out I'll let you know."

"God bless you, sir."

I turned the incident over in my mind a good deal that night, and I almost made a resolution to take Cupples into my confidence. Roger Cupples, a lawyer of San Francisco, sat next me at table, and with the freedom of wild Westerners we were already well acquainted, although only a few days out. Then I thought of putting a supposition case to the captain—he was a thorough gentleman—and if he spoke generously about the supposition case I would spring the real one on him. The stowaway had impressed me by his language as being a man worth doing something for.

Next day I was glad to see that it was rainy. There would be no demand for ship chairs that day. I felt that real sunshiny weather would certainly unearth, or unchair, my stowaway. I met Cupples on deck, and we walked a few rounds together.

At last Cupples, who had been telling me some stories of court trial in San Francisco, said, "Let's sit down and wrap up. This deck's too wet to walk on."

"All the seats are damp," I said.

"I'll get out my steamer-chair. Steward," he cried to the deck steward, who was shoving a mop back and forth, "get me a chair. There's a tag on it. "Berth 96."

"No, no," I cried hastily, "let's go into the cabin. It's raining."

"Only a drizzle. Won't hurt you at sea, you know."

By this time the deck steward was hauling down chairs trying to find No. 96, which I felt sure would be near the bottom. I could not control my anxiety as the steward got nearer and nearer the tarpaulin. At last I cried:

"Steward, never mind that chair; take the first two that come handy."

Cupples looked astonished, and as we sat down, I said:

"I have something to tell you, and I trust you will say nothing about it to any one else. There's a man under those chairs."

The look that came into the lawyer's face showed that he thought me demented; but when I told him the whole story the judicial expression came on, and he said, shaking his head:

"That's bad business."

"I know it."

"Yes, but it's worse than you have any idea of. I presume that you don't know what section 4837 of the Revised Statutes says?"

"No, I don't."

"Well, it is to the effect that any person or persons, who willfully or with malice aforethought, or otherwise, shall aid, abet, succor, or cherish, either directly or indirectly, or by implication, any person who feloniously or secretly conceals himself on any vessel, barge, brig, schooner, bark, clipper, steamship or other craft coming within the jurisdiction of the United States, the said person's purpose being the defrauding of the revenue of, or the escaping any or all of the just legal dues exacted by such vessel, barge, etc., the person so aiding or abetting, shall in the eye of the law be considered as accomplice before, during and after the illegal act, and shall in such case be subject to the penalties accruing thereunto, to wit—a fine of not more than five thousand dollars, or imprisonment of not more than two years—or both at the option of the judge before whom the party so accused is convicted."

"Great Heavens! is that really so?"

"Well, it isn't word for word, but that is the purport. Of course, if I had my books here, I—why, you've doubtless heard of the case of the Pacific Steamship Company vs. Cumberland. I was retained on behalf of the company. Now, all Cumberland did was to allow the man—he was sent up for two years—to carry his valise on board, but we proved the intent. Like a fool he boasted of it, but the steamer brought back the man, and Cumberland got off with four thousand dollars and costs. Never got out of the scrape less than ten thousand dollars. Then again, the steamship Peruvian versus McNish; that is even more to the—"

"See here, Cupples. Come with me tonight and see the man. If you heard him talk you would see the inhumanity—"

"Tush. I'm not fool enough to mix up in such a matter; and look here, you'll have to work it pretty slick if you get yourself out. The man will be caught as sure as fate; then knowingly, or through fright, he'll incriminate you."

"What would you do if you were in my place?"

"My dear sir, don't put it that way. It's a reflection on both my judgment and my legal knowledge. I couldn't be in such a scrape. But, as a lawyer—minus the fee—I'll tell you what you should do. You should give the man up before witnesses—before witnesses. I'll be one of them myself. Get as many of the cabin passengers as you like out here to-day, and let the officers search. If he charges you with what the law terms support, deny it, and call attention to the fact that you have given information. By the way, I would give written information and keep a copy."

"I gave the man my word not to inform on him, and so I can't do it to-day, but I'll tell him of it to-night."

"And have him commit suicide, or give himself up first and incriminate you? Nonsense. Just release yourself from your promise. That's all. He'll trust you."

"Yes, poor wretch, I'm afraid he will."

About ten o'clock that night I resolved to make another appeal to Roger Cupples to, at least, stand off and hear the man talk. Cupple's stateroom, No. 96, was in the forward part of the steamer, down a long passage and off a short side passage. Mine was aft the cabin. The door of 96 was partly open, and inside an astonishing sight met my gaze.

There stood my stowaway. He was evidently admiring himself in a glass, and with a brush was touching up his face with a dark paint here and there. When he put on a woe-begone look he was the stowaway; when he chuckled to himself he was Roger Cupples, Esq.

The moment the thing dawned on me I quietly withdrew and went up the forward companion way. Soon Cupples came cautiously up, and seeing the way clear, scudded along in the darkness and hid in the aft wheel-house. I saw the whole thing now. It was scheme to get me to make a fool of myself, some fine day, before the rest of the passengers and have a standing joke on me. I walked forward. The first officer was on duty.

"I have reason to believe," I said, "that there is a stowaway in the aft wheel-house."

Quicker than it takes me to tell it a detachment of sailors were sent aft under the guidance of the third mate. I went through the saloon and smoking-room, and said to the gentlemen who were playing cards and reading:

"There's a row upstairs of some kind."

We were all on deck before the crew had surrounded the wheel-house. There was a rattle of folded steam-chairs, a pounce by the third mate, and out came the unfortunate Cupples, dragged by the collar.

"Hold on; let go. This is a mistake."

"You can't both hold on and let go," said Stalker, of Indiana.

"Come out o' this," cried the mate, jerking him forward.

With a wrench the stowaway tore himself free and made a dash for the companion way. A couple of sailors instantly tripped him up.

"Let go of me; I'm a cabin passenger," cried Cupples.

"Bless me!" I cried in astonishment.

"This isn't you, Cupples? Why, I acted on your own advice and that of the Revised Statutes, number whatever-they-were."

"Well, act on my advice again," cried the infuriated Cupples, and go to—the hold."

However, he was in better humor the next day and stood treat all round. We found, subsequently, that Cupples was a New York actor, and at the entertainment given for the benefit of the sailors' orphans a few nights after, he recited a piece in costume that just melted the ladies. It was voted a wonderfully touching performance, and he called it, "The stowaway."—From "In a Steamer Chair": Cassell Publishing Co.

WOMAN'S CORNER.

TISSUE PAPER WORK.

Tissue paper may be bought of different qualities; the plain paper costs from two sheets for a cent to ten cents a sheet. The one cent per sheet quality is satisfactory when the desired color or shade can be obtained in that quality. Certain differences in the price of the paper seem to be due to the coloring rather than to the actual quality of the paper, the more rare and delicate shades cost two and three cents per sheet, and the dark heavy paper in rich colors costs ten cents. Let us include for tissue paper work Japanese napkins, which cost from 50 cents to $1 a hundred; and a little more proportionally for a single dozen. The crimped tissue paper is 20 cents per yard.

As tissue paper is cheap stuff and has no beauty in itself, the beauty of the articles made from it depend first upon the colors, and second upon the skill with which the articles are made. It is always difficult to select a few shades from a great many colors, because nothing is more modified by its environment than color, and there seems to be no substance the color of which is so modified as tissue paper. Then also a package of paper is much deeper in shade than a single sheet. In selecting your colors these things must be borne in mind. Take single sheets entirely away from the shop-keeper's collection into a strong light if you hope to make a satisfactory selection.

For flower work select the natural colors of the flowers. For other work your individual taste decides. This year, several contrasting colors are combined in art work, furnishings, etc., etc., to form a harmonious whole. In combining several colors great care is required in the selection of shades, as a little variation of one shade may kill the whole effect, and what might otherwise be pleasing to the eye is hideous. For instance, certain shades of light blue, light green and violet are very beautiful in combination, but change one of the shades and the effect is ugliness. I have seen certain shades of green, yellow and pink combined with black, whose beauty thrilled me like the charm of a poem, and I have seen other combinations of the same colors in different shades that it were a positive pain to look upon.

A pretty fancy just now is to make articles of college colors. Princeton, orange and black; Amherst, purple and white; Harvard, crimson; Yale, blue; the two last often combined with white, etc., etc. In tissue paper work there are made shaving balls and pen wipers, wall pockets, lamp shades, bonbon, handkerchief and other fancy boxes, photograph frames, handkerchief cases, sachets, etc., etc.

Shaving balls are made from cutting out circles from the paper, folding the circles three times and fastening enough of them together at their centers to form a solid ball. The shaver pulls these circles out of the ball as he needs them. I believe these are the best liked of any arrangement of the kind for the man who shaves himself. You may use a tea plate to cut the circles. Fasten in at the center of the circles the two ends of a piece of ribbon or cord about twenty inches long to hang the ball by. Two or three more colors may be used. Some balls are made of several shades of the same color, the dark shades at the top and shading out to almost white below. This style is the prettiest. These balls cut by a saucer or sauce plate make convenient pen wipers.

Lamp shades of many forms are made of tissue paper. There are those made to hang full over a conical brass wire frame, those made over the pagoda frames, and flowers, butterflies and like fancies to fasten on one side of the lamp. The shades made over brass wire frames are made exactly as the silk shades are made, using glue to fasten the edges instead of sewing them. The crimped paper makes very graceful, pretty lamp shades. The edges are pulled out in ruffles at the top and bottom, and a ribbon is tied around to hold it close to the frame at the top.

Another style of shade is the butterfly. Draw on cardboard the outline of the wings of a butterfly or a moth as the wings would appear if the two parts of each wing were laid down flat on the cardboard, but enlarged to the size you want your shade. Cut out the wings in one piece; then about an inch from the edge of the wings draw a line parallel everywhere to the edge of the wings. Cut around this line leaving a skeleton framework of the wings. Use crimped paper or crimp plain paper by drawing quickly through your closed hand several times. Make the four wings of the tissue paper; glue on to the edges of the skeleton, overlapping the parts of the wing as seen in nature. Make a body for the butterfly by a roll of the tissue paper, tying threads around to mark the sections. Put on beads for eyes and bits of feathers for the antennæ. You can buy a wire frame to which to attach the butterfly, to fasten upon the lamp chimney or you may bend wire for that purpose. I cannot without an illustration describe these frames, but you may see them at any store where lampshades are sold; there are hooks to fasten over the top of the lamp chimney, and prongs to keep the shade away from the side of the chimney. Some frames clasp around the lamp below the chimney, and the wire is bent upward for the attachment of the shade. Having mounted the butterfly, gild and color his wings and body in imitation of nature, and last of all line with tissue paper. These butterflies are usually made of white or buff colored paper, but I think a greater success would be a butterfly made in exact imitation of nature, form, coloring, marking and all.

Bon-bon-boxes made of cardboard and covered with plain or crimped tissue paper with a bunch of paper violets on the lid are dainty and pretty.

Wall pockets may be made by using an advertising fan for a frame and putting on a pocket as you would make one of silk. Wind the handle with paper and add bows of paper or ribbon.

Grape baskets may be covered with the paper for many uses. You may trim the upper edge of the basket with plaitings or flutings.

Photograph frames made of the crimped or plain paper are very neat. Cut stiff cardboard in the form and of the size desired, square, oblong, oval or circular. Cut out the middle around the center to correspond with the form of the frame. Fit over this cardboard frame a thin thickness of cotton wadding and glue the wadding to the frame. Now cut your paper large enough to fold around the frame outside, and glue it down on the back. Do not cut out the tissue paper in the middle, but cut two diagonals

THE NEW MASONIC QUARTERS.

Dedicated Tuesday by the Grand Lodge. A Description of the Rooms and a History of the Lodge.

Thomas Lodge, F. and A. M., dedicated its new hall Wednesday afternoon. The day was stormy, but a good number were present. The exercises were private, only Masons being admitted. The officers of seven of the neighboring lodges were present and the following officers of the grand lodge: Grand Master, Harvey N. Shepard; deputy grand master, Henry G. Fay; senior grand warden, William H. H. Soule; junior grand warden, Charles Harris; recording grand secretary, Sereno D. Nickerson; grand marshal, Charles E. Phipps; grand chaplain, Rev. Samuel S. Searing; grand lecturer, G. H. G. McGrew; grand tyler, John H. Chester; deputy 13th Masonic district, David T. Remington; deputy 17th masonic district, Lovell L. Gage. The grand Master and his associates were introduced by a committee composed of George Robinson, George B. Kenerson and William Merriam. The grand master took the chair and a committee examined the apartments. Upon the report of the committee that they were found suitable, the rooms were by the solemn rites of the order consecrated and dedicated to the uses of Free Masonry. Following came the installation of these officers, who were elected at the annual meeting Monday evening: Worshipful Master, Charles T. Brainerd; senior warden, G. H. Wilkins; junior warden, Charles E. Fish; treasurer, W. E. Stone; secretary, Frank N. Carpenter; senior deacon, William H. Brainerd; junior deacon, Horace R. Paine; marshal, James B. Shaw; chaplain, Rev. Herbert F. Moulton; senior steward, John P. Eastman; junior steward, Edwin P. Ball; tyler, S. W. Shumway. Then the grand marshal proclaimed the officers of Thomas Lodge duly installed and empowered to go forward with their duties. Supper was served at 4.30 in Grand Army Hall, where abundant preparation was made for all present, and where Masonic sociability prevailed.

In the evening a large number of ladies and friends of the order gathered for an inspection of the rooms. The exercises opened with an address of welcome by Worshipful Master Charles T. Brainerd; George Robinson was then introduced as toastmaster. The first speech was made by Lovell L. Gage of Warren, deputy of the 17th Masonic district, who made a pleasing address. Then followed remarks by W. H. Osgood, a member of Mt. Zion Lodge of Barre, who is a past district deputy grand master, Dr. G. H. Wilkins, Charles E. Fish, Rev. Herbert F. Moulton, W. E. Stone, William Merriam, L. H. Brigham, for whom Brigham Lodge of Ludlow was named, James B. Shaw, and the last past master, William A. Weld. The exercises closed with the singing of Auld Lang Syne by the assembly.

The new and commodious home of the Masons is situated in the block on Central street purchased by them last summer of W. H. Hitchcock. It was then a one-story structure. A second story has been added from plans drawn by E. P. Ball of Palmer, the carpenter work being done by James Morgan of Wilbraham. The entire floor is devoted to the use of the order. The entrance is from Central street on the corner of the building nearest Main, the second floor being reached by a flight of 18 easy steps. Arriving at the top of the stairs the visitor finds himself in a lobby 12 by 22 feet, from the farther end of which a door leads into the banquet room 13 by 23 feet. A door from the lower end of this room opens into the lodge room. At the front end of the lobby is a kitchen 11½ by 12½ feet, fitted with dish closets and other conveniences. The remainder of the front of the building is devoted to a reception room 20 by 30 feet. Between this and the lodge room there is an ante room 6 by 15 feet, a preparation room 6 by 10 feet, and a closet. The lodge room is in the northeast corner of the building and is 30 by 40 feet. This room is finished in cypress wood, the others in North Carolina pine. All the rooms are 14 feet high. Ample toilet and closet rooms are provided. The floors are nicely carpeted, except that in the kitchen. The lobby is fitted with hat and coat trees for the outer garments of the members. The walls of the rooms are colored and the ceilings frescoed, the work being done by the Old Corner Wall Paper Co. of Springfield. The heating is done by steam from a boiler in the basement of the block. Electricity is used for lighting. The lodge room is lighted by two electroliers near the ceiling, and upon each officer's desk is a single light with an adjustable socket, so arranged that seven distinct gradations of light, from a dim glow to full brightness, can be obtained. The walls of the lodge and banquet halls are decorated with various emblematic pictures of the order.

Thomas lodge was chartered on the thirteenth day of December, A. L. 5976, which corresponds to the calendar year 1796. It was located in the town of Monson, and the charter was issued under the seal of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, being signed by Paul Revere, grand master, Samuel Dunn, deputy grand master, Isaiah Thomas, grand senior warden, and Joseph Laughton, grand junior warden. The first staff of officers was: Worshipful Master, Dr. Samuel Guthrie; senior warden, Dr. David Young; junior warden, Hezekiah Fisk; treasurer, Samuel D. Ward; secretary, Dr. Ede Whitaker. At the time of its institution it was the only lodge in this part of the state, and was the 21st to be founded in Massachusetts. For a number of years candidates came from the territory bounded by Springfield, Stafford, Dana, and Warren, then called Western. In the year 1796 there were three other lodges founded, Washington of Roxbury, Union of Dorchester and Harmony of Northfield. The next lodges chartered in this section were Mt. Zion of Barre in 1800, and Hampden of Springfield in 1827. Thomas Lodge being the oldest in this section, has been the parent of many others now existing in this vicinity. Most of their charter members were made Masons under its direction, and the growth and prosperity of them all has been carefully watched by the parent lodge. Many prominent and influential men have been its members, among whom may be mentioned Stephen Pynchon of Springfield, Hosea Ballou, then of Dana, but later pastor of the Universalist church in Boston now under the charge of Rev. Dr. Miner, and Jacob B. Merrick, formerly agent of the Thorndike Co.

The Lodge received its name from one Isaiah Thomas, who at the time of its organization was senior warden of the grand lodge. Mr. Thomas was a resident of Worcester and by trade a printer. He was an ardent supporter of Masonry, and in appreciation of his efforts in behalf of the cause the new lodge assumed his name. In recognition of the honor bestowed upon him Mr. Thomas presented his namesakes with a complete and valuable set of officers' jewels, which are in use by the lodge at the present day. In addition he made a bequest of $100 in his will to the lodge, provided it was in existence at the time of his death. Unfortunately this occurred during the period of suspension, and the money by another provision went to the Antiquarian Society of Worcester. In 1820 Mr. Thomas delivered an address before the lodge at Monson, the original manuscript of which is now in the possession of Judge Robinson. The active life of Thomas Lodge is divided into two periods. The first is from the foundation until, at a regular communication held at Monson on January 14th, 1835, it was voted "That this lodge be closed." The charter was surrendered to the Grand Lodge subject to its orders, and for many years only the remembrance of the former existence remained in the minds of the surviving members. This cessation was deemed advisable on account of the bitter anti-Masonic war raging at that time in New England. Better times came at last, and the second period of existence commenced. By the efforts of its friends Thomas Lodge was revived, as the following action of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, taken at Boston September 10th, 1856, will show:

Ordered, That the charter of the late Thomas Lodge at Monson be, and the same is, hereby restored to the following petitioners (former members of said Lodge) with permission to remove and hereafter hold the same in the town of Palmer, viz:—Brothers Elias Turner, Joseph L. Reynolds, S. F. Newton, Jacob Thompson, J. R. Flynt, Alfred Ely, Jacob Nichols, D. R. Hannum, Otis Bradford and Joel Tucker. And the foregoing petitioners, and their associates and successors are hereby invested with the rank and all the powers and privileges originally conferred by the charter of said Lodge.

WINSLOW LEWIS, Grand Master.
CHARLES W. MOORE, Grand Secretary.

At the time the lodge suspended its meetings in Monson the office of the Worshipful Master was held by the late Joseph L. Reynolds of that town, and the late Elias Turner was the senior warden. After the reorganization the same officers were again chosen. The ancient Bible used by the lodge in the first of its existance was preserved by the Rev. Dr. Ely, and was brought into use again after the reorganization. From the date of organization the masters have been: Dr. Samuel Guthrie, 1797–1802; Ozim Blashfield, 1802–03; Dr. Ede Whitaker, 1803–06; Stephen Pynchon, 1806–08; Joel Norcross, 1808–10; Samuel Williard, 1810–13; Joel Norcross, 1813–14; Abraham Haskell, 1813–16; Joel Norcross, 1816–18; Dr. Ede Whittaker, 1818–20; Abraham Haskell, 1820–21; George Bliss, 1821–23; Timothy Packard, 1823–26; Joseph L. Reynolds, 1826 to suspension. Since the reorganization the following have held the office: Joseph L. Reynolds, Elias Turner, Sylvanus G. Shaw, George Robinson, Andrew Pinney, James B. Shaw, George B. Kenerson, Marshall Fox, Dr. J. K. Warren, George O. Henry, Samuel H. Hellyar, William A. Weld. The senior past master is George Robinson, and the senior past secretary is Dr. William Holbrook, who rendered very careful work for the lodge during his term of office.

The first home of Thomas Lodge in Palmer was in the McGilvray block on South Main street; after staying there several years a change was made into the hall in Commercial block now occupied by the Odd Fellows. From there the lodge moved to Wales Hall, when it stood on the corner of Central and Pleasant streets. When the block was moved to its present location and converted into an opera house the room formerly used as a banquet hall was taken for a lodge room. From there the change is now made to the present comfortable home.

A peculiar state of affairs in regard to social and fraternal orders existed in this country about the time of the war of the Revolution. Nearly all growth in Masonic orders was checked in the year 1770 by the prospects of war with Great Britain, but the lodge meetings were kept up as usual. It was not until 1791 that any new lodges were chartered. The aid rendered to the cause of the colonists in Revolutionary times by the Masonic fraternity can never be estimated. Such of the colonists as were Masons knew that brother Masons could be trusted, and thus many plans were formulated which could not have been made otherwise. An instance of the loyalty of the Masonic bodies to the new country is shown by this event: When the news of the death of General George Washington was received Thomas Lodge held a special communication and resolutions of sympathy and regret were adopted which were engrossed upon the records of the lodge and were enclosed in a mourning border.

There are three other branches of Masonry which hold their meetings in the same lodge room as Thomas Lodge; they are Hampden Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Washington Council, Royal and Select Masters; and Revere Chapter, order of the Eastern Star. Hampden Chapter was chartered in Palmer in 1864. The first high priest was James B. Shaw, who held that office for 20 consecutive years. The following are the past high priests: James B. Shaw, Andrew Pinney, George Robinson, George O. Henry and Samuel H. Hellyar. The present officers are: High Priest, George B. Kenerson; K., J. J. Helliwell; scribe, William A. Weld; treasurer, G. H. Wilkins; secretary, Frank N. Carpenter: C. H., James B. Shaw; P. S., Francis D. Barton; R. A. C., William A. Barnes; M. 3d V., Frank A. Royce; M. 2d V., F. J. Wassum; M. 1st V., C. H. Hobbs, chaplain, H. E. W. Clark; tyler, S. W. Shumway. Washington Council was chartered in the town of Ware in the year 1874. The first thrice illustrious master was Herbert M. Coney. These are the past thrice illustrious masters: Herbert M. Coney, James E. Ripley, Walter P. Sutcliffe, Charles F. Merrill, Charles S. Robinson and Andrew Bryson. In 1890 the council was transferred from Ware to Palmer, and the first regular meeting held in this place was April 8th, 1890 The following officers for the ensuing year will be installed at a meeting next Monday evening: Thrice Illustrious Master, George Robinson; deputy master, Frank A. Royce; P. C. of W., William A. Weld; treasurer, H. Newton Sedgwick; recorder, George A. Bills; chaplain, G. H. Wilkins; M. of C., D. H. Brown; C. of G., Frederick Allen of Warren; C. of C., H. E. W. Clark of Thorndike; steward, W. A. Barnes; sentinel, S. W. Shumway. Revere Chapter, order of the Eastern Star, was organized June 7th, 1893. At present it is working under a dispensation from the grand lodge, and the 20th inst. is the date set for granting the charter. The following is the present board of officers: W. M., Miss Helen Robinson; W. P., Charles E. Fuller; A. M., Mrs. L. M. Grosvenor; secretary, Mrs. D. S. Davis; treasurer, Mrs. Mary A. Royce; Cond., Mrs. Jennie Weld; A. C., Miss Jennie Brainerd; Ada, Mrs. Georgia A. Fuller; Ruth, Mrs. Annie E. Moore; Esther, Mrs. Arabelle K. Ruggles; Martha, Carrie W. Brown; Electa, Mrs. Jennie C. Carpenter; chaplain, Mrs. Annie L. Frost; organist, Mrs. Fannie M. Brown; warden, Mrs. Catharine H. Shumway; sentinel, Silas W. Shumway.

Universalists in Conference.

The monthly meeting of the Western Massachusetts Universalist Ministers' Association was held yesterday forenoon in St. Paul's church. There were two topics for discussion, "The Relation of Ministers to the Temperance Question," and "What and How to Read," which were considered by Revs. Moore of Warren, Druley of Stafford Springs, Blackford of Monson, Crossley of Springfield and Moulton of Palmer. In the afternoon the Connecticut Valley Conference of Universalist Ministers was held in the church. The conference meeting at the opening of the session was conducted by Rev. Mr. Farnsworth of Charlton. The sermon was preached by Rev. I. L. Case of Thompsonville, Ct., his subject being "Come, Let Us Reason Together, Saith the Lord." This was followed by addresses, Rev. T. C. Druly of Stafford Springs, Ct., speaking on "The Purposes of this Conference," Rev. Charles Conklin of New Haven, Ct., on "Institutional Churches," and Mr. Wise of Boston on "The Financial Problem of Our Churches," all of which were discussed by the assembly. A supper was served in the church parlors at 6, after which came the evening session. The devotional exercises were led by Rev. Mr. Potter of Shelburne Falls, after which other addresses were on "The Conference Meeting," by Rev. Marion Crosley of Springfield, "Church Membership," by Rev. Harry Blackford of Monson, and "Universalism, Its Doctrine of Salvation," by Rev. Mr. Farnsworth of Charlton.

The Palmer Steam Laundry Burned.

An explosion of a gasoline tank caused a serious blaze in the building of the Palmer Steam Laundry Wednesday noon. The proprietor, Joseph Barrett, had been running a shirt ironing machine in which are rolls heated by gasoline flames. At 12 o'clock he stopped the machine and supposed he shut the valve leading to the tank. He heard a pop behind him and on turning around saw the tank blazing. He tried to throw it out of a window, but it was too warm. Some little delay was experienced in ringing in an alarm, as box 74, on the corner of Park and School streets, could not be opened. After a run over to the engine house box 57 was pulled in. Two men at once started out with the hose carriage and dragged it to the fire. The steamer followed but it was not necessary to use it. Two lines of hose were attached to the hydrant on Maple street and with these streams the fire was got under control. One thing which handicapped the men in handling the fire was the fact that the building was sheathed up inside and the fire would stay in the walls for a long time. The building is practically ruined. The loss on the machinery cannot be estimated until what is left is taken out of the ruins. The insurance carried was $600 on the machinery and $700 on the building, placed with the Fitch agency. Mr. Barrett says that business was good, and that it was paying as well as it ever did. Some of the machinery was purchased only last summer. He has not yet decided about rebuilding.

A Horse Drowned in the Canal.

A horse belonging to the Palmer and Monson Electric Company was left near the door of the station at Blanchardville Saturday night while the driver went into the station on business. Upon coming out the horse was nowhere to be seen. The driver walked up the road and inquired of a passing man if he had seen a horse without a driver, but received a reply in the negative. Upon going by the canal on his way back he noticed a rope floating on the water. This was pulled up, and it was found that the horse was attached to the other end. The animal was left hitched with a weight in the corner formed by the station and a bank wall, and probably got his foot over the rein and in response to the pull backed with the wagon. When the wagon went over the bank of the canal it was heavy enough to drag the horse with it and hold him under until he drowned.

An Attempted Hold-Up.

A bold attempt was made last Friday night to hold up Dr. Sawin on the Cooley bridge. Dr. and Mrs. Sawin were on their way to Palmer, and while crossing the bridge a man stepped out and made a grab for the horse's head. But he was unacquainted with the animal, for she was too quick for him, and making a sudden spring upset the fellow and spoiled his little game almost before the occupants of the carriage had realized what was happening. A lighted lantern swung from the under side of the carriage, so the fellow's movements were plainly seen.

The G. A. R. rooms in the memorial building, which were found so difficult to heat last winter, on account of the wind sweeping in over the alcove above the entrance to the main room, and also over the one at the back of the stage, have been changed with the view of stopping the entrance of the cold, the openings into the room by the way of the alcoves having been sheathed up.

The Woronoco Whist Club met with Miss Jennie Eastman on Park street Wednesday evening, and the prizes for the first half of the course were awarded. The first prize for gentlemen, a silver game counter, was won by George A. Adams; the first prize for the ladies, a silver calendar, was captured by Miss Eastman. The booby prizes went to Edwin E. Brooks and Miss Effie Moffatt.

The snow storm of Saturday night emphatically demonstrated the need of town by-laws regarding the cleaning of snow from sidewalks. The snow was of the kind which packs hard, and church-goers found that on only about half the walks on Main street had any attempt been made at clearing away the snow, while on the majority of those the work had been only half done.

Tax Collector Weld has paid over to the town treasurer about $36,000 of the $41,000 taxes assessed. By vote of the town all taxes were to be collected by January 1st, but this will not be possible. The hard times have made it impossible for many to pay their taxes, and there is a much larger amount of property tax due now than a year ago, when the greater part of it was paid in time to save the discount.

The buildings on the J. H. Keith farm had a narrow escape from destruction by fire yesterday morning. G. W. Powers, who lives on the place, arose early and built a fire, after which he returned to bed. When he got up later there was a strong smell of smoke in the house, and examination showed that the woodwork near the chimney in the cellar was on fire. The flames were soon extinguished and the damage was small.

The first real snow storm of the season came late last Saturday night, about six inches falling. Sunday the weather moderated and rain fell the most of the day. It was not a warm rain, however, and the snow did not disappear very rapidly. Sunday night the mercury took a decided drop, and Monday morning the highways were coated with ice, making very fair sleighing, which was improved by more snow Tuesday night.

It will be remembered that the day before the assault on Mr. Lawrence last summer by the negro Fields, who is now serving a sentence of six years for the crime, Fields was accompanied by another man, the two working in the hay field in return for their dinner. The fellow was not with Fields on the day of the assault, and has not been heard of since until Wednesday, when he was arrested in Saranac, N. Y., for complicity in several recent bold robberies at Lenox. The fellow's name is William King, and he has an unsavory record.

Quaboag Council, Royal Arcanum, elected the following officers for the ensuing year at the meeting Tuesday evening: Regent, Charles E. Fuller; vice regent, Charles A. LeGro; past regent, John H. Shaw; orator, Arthur E. Fitch; secretary, Frank A. Royce; treasurer, H. Newton Sedgwick; collector, Fred W. Harrison; guide, Frank N. Carpenter; chaplain, George Sumner; warden, E. A. Maxwell; trustee for three years, D. H. Brown; representative to the grand council, John H. Shaw; alternate, W. H. Shaw. The council has been very fortunate in regard to loss of its members by death during the past year, only one, Everett Sedgwick, having been taken away.

The annual meeting of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society was held at the district court room Tuesday morning. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Charles E. Fuller of Palmer; first vice president, A. H. White of Monson; second vice president, H. E. Wallis of Holland; secretary and treasurer, O. P. Allen of Palmer; directors, J. O. Hamilton and Louis E. Chandler of Palmer, F. D. Rogers and Henry A. Rindge of Monson, E. N. Fisher of Ludlow, Josiah Stebbins of Brimfield, F. E. Clark of Wilbraham, D. R. McCray of Hampden, B. P. Aiken of West Brookfield, E. L. Cummings of Belchertown, W. L. Day of Warren. William M. Tucker of Monson was elected a delegate to the state board of agriculture for three years.

A much-needed improvement which has been the subject of a great deal of newspaper discussion of late is the placing of a sign at the head of Commercial street saying "This is the way to the depot." An illustration of how convenient such a sign would be was shown on the street Wednesday afternoon in this manner: A gentleman, evidently a stranger in the place, came out of a store in the Nassowanno House block just as Conductor Camp's train was pulling into the depot from the east. The man wished to take the train, and as he saw it started across the street, thinking he could cross the vacant lot to the depot. Finding the depot fenced off he started on a run towards the bridge near the Weeks House. On his way he was met by a townsman who informed him of the quickest way to the depot by Commercial street. He was just going around the corner of Caryl's block when the train ran out of the station to take the side track. It is reasonable to suppose that the man was in no small degree disgusted at the hurry he was in when he found the train waited about 15 minutes.

State Primary School Notes.

Six children were received Wednesday.

Miss Royce is suffering with a sprained arm.

N. H. Kempton spent the first part of the week visiting friends in Boston and Lynn.

During the past week 24 children have left the school, most of them being placed out to board.

George W. Johnson, Mrs. Anne B. Richardson and Mrs. Henrietta B. Codman of the State Board of Lunacy and Charity paid a flying visit to the school yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Campbell of Palmer assisted the Hospital Circle in their entertainment Saturday evening with several selections on the violin, with piano accompaniment, which were much enjoyed by the boys and officers.

Yesterday morning the flag was raised in honor of the 121 boys whose names were read in the perfect grade for the past week. By continuing in this grade for four weeks a boy is entitled to have his name placed on the roll of honor. If 100 boys can succeed in attaining this high standard the superintendent has promised to present each boy with a handsome badge.

Probate Court.

At a session of the probate court held in Springfield last Friday affidavit of notice of appointment was filled in the estate of Orson Sherman, late of Brimfield, and an extension of time to prove claims was granted in the estate of Samuel J. Goodenough, late of Wilbraham. At Wednesday's session administration was granted in the estates of Frederick Fay, late of Monson. Rufus Fay administrator; Lizzie Ruppel, late of Ludlow. John W. Ruppel administrator. Wills approved of—Algernon S. Flagg, late of Wilbraham, Nancy M. Flagg, executrix; Allyn D. Seaver, late of Wilbraham. A. Jackson Blanchard and Allyn M. Seaver executors; Oliver Spaulding, late of Wilbraham, Elmer E. Spaulding executor. Guardians appointed—Lorenda Griffin of George A. Griffin of Hampden, insane; Andrew J. Blanchard of Sara A. Pease of Hampden, insane. Accounts rendered in the estates of—Joseph L. Reynolds, late of Monson; Violata Fuller, late of Ludlow; Andrew Beebe, late of Hampden; James L. S. Wesson, late of Wilbraham; Adin Whitney, late of Ludlow. Affidavit of notice of appointment was filled in the estate of Abbie Whitney, late of Ludlow.

District Court.

On Saturday William Andrews of Monson for lewdness was given six months in the house of correction. Charles F. Crawford of Wales was charged with assaulting Joseph W. Adams of Brimfield. After hearing the witnesses the case was dismissed, as there was not evidence to convict the defendant. The case of Daniel Purcell of Monson for overdriving a horse, continued from the 27th ult., was tried. As the articles which were missing from the carriage at the time of its return to the stable had been restored the stable keeper was satisfied and the defendant was discharged upon the payment of costs. Joseph Wegrzyn of Bondsville was arraigned on a charge of bastardy preferred by Agnieska Babiec. The case was continued to next Monday for trial.

On Monday Martin Stokes of Thorndike was assessed $5 for an assault. The continued adultery case against G. Marshall Shaw was continued until the 11th. Jerry Kelliher of New Braintree paid fines amounting to $15, settling cases for drunkenness and disturbing the peace, which were continued from the 3d ult.

On Tuesday George Starkey of Brimfield appeared to answer to a complaint charging him with drunkenness. He will reside for the next two months in the house of correction at Springfield.

On Wednesday morning five vagrants, who refused to put in the customary morning's work at the stone pile in payment for their night's lodging and breakfast, were brought up. They gave the following names and addresses: Thomas Wilson and John Mulholland of Chicago; Thomas Fisher and Charles Stewart of Boston; August Noldstrom of Sweden. The quintette had evidently made up their minds during the night that it was unjust for the commonwealth to require the knights of the road to labor in payment for their keeping, and when Landlord Allen appeared in the morning he was informed that they did not propose to break stone. Each was given a year on the state farm at Bridgewater, whither they departed on the noon train under the wing of Deputy Sheriff Studley.

This morning two guests of the tramp room declined to work. They were taken before the Judge and Owen Lavin, by reason of physical disability, was discharged. The other, Omar Authier, decided it was better to work than be committed, so was given the opportunity.

BONDSVILLE.

Miss Hattie Fairbanks of Ware is visiting her aunt, Mrs. Henry Morgan.

A new meat market has been opened in John Riley's building on Commercial street.

Mr. and Mr. William McCormick are receiving congratulations on the birth of a son.

To-day being the Feast of the Immaculate Conception, masses were held in the Catholic church at 5 and 8 o'clock.

St. Mary's Temperance Society has engaged Union Hall for an entertainment and dance on the evening before Fast Day.

The concert and dance given by the brass band last week Wednesday was a decided success, financially and otherwise. The band will clear about $57, and wishes to thank the public for its patronage. The band intends to put on a minstrel entertainment some time after Lent.

J. W. Molloy, with a company of local and out-of-town talent, will present "The Shamrock and Rose" on the last Friday evening before Lent. The entertainment will be followed by a social dance. The talent will be from Three Rivers, Bondsville and this place, and promises to give a good performance.

The Foresters' Ball.

The Foresters are actively planning for their concert and ball, which will take place on Tuesday evening, Jan. 23, at Union Hall. The famous Brigham Orchestra of Marlboro, with Harry Brigham as prompter, has been engaged, and the announcement is a sufficient guarantee of good music. The following comprise the committee of arrangements: D. F. Sullivan, M. F. Keefe, J. F. Wagner, George Hutchinson, M. Coffee, William Moran and James Griffin. Thomas J. Moran will act as floor manager, and will be assisted by Thomas Longtine and Charles McCarty. The tickets admitting to concert and ball will be $1, concert tickets 25c.

The Postmastership.

J. F. Luman has been appointed postmaster, and will take possession it is said, about the first of the month removing the office to Hitchcock's block, directly opposite its present location. There have been several applications for the office, but Mr. Luman had the endorsement of the most influential men in the state, which with the facts that he was an active worker in politics and the son of a vetran who was starved to death in prison in the late war, won him the appointment which is approved by the public in general, though of course there are some who are dissatisfied. Mr. Adams has made a good postmaster, and has the enjoyment of many friends.

THREE RIVERS.

Miss Bryant has been ill with tonsilitis during the week.

O. B. Hill has recovered sufficiently to be able to leave his room.

Rev. Mr. Weeks preached at the state primary school last Sunday.

Rev. T. A. G. Cote of Lowell called on a number of his friends here last Monday.

E. L. Derby of Orange, formerly of Three Rivers, visited friends in town on Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Amos Olds have returned from South Willington, Ct., after an absence of two weeks.

It is said that J. W. Cheney has purchased a portion of T. D. Potter's real estate on East Main street.

Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Cross of Springfield spent a few days this week with Mr. and Mrs. Charles Smith.

Mrs. Caroline Smith of Palmer spent Thanksgiving and a part of last week with her brother, J. B. Burlingame, on Baptist Hill.

The question is being frequently asked: Would it not make street traffic more facile if a few electric light poles were transplanted.

Miss Emma Bengle of Waterloo, Can., is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. James Barber, intending to spend the greater part of the winter in this place.

An arc light has been placed at the corner of Kelly and High streets, which makes it more pleasant for travel in this part of the village during dark nights.

Joseph Barker had an operation performed by Drs. Bliss and Desmarais on Wednesday. The patient is doing as well as could be expected, but is seriously ill.

Principal Adams of the grammar school has been quite ill with a severe cold during this week, which occasioned the dismissal of the grammar school for several days.

A temperance meeting will be held in the Union church next Monday evening, to which every one is invited. It is expected now that ministers from the surrounding villages will give the addresses.

Mr. Bengle narrowly escaped serious injury one day this week while doing some work which required the use of a sharp knife. While thus engaged he slipped and fell, the knife coming under him and cutting an ugly gash in his temple, which was dressed by Dr. Desmarais.

Dr. Bouley has proved himself a skillful physician in the treatment of a cancer which has caused Mr. Roberts intense pain during past years. Several doctors have treated Mr. Roberts at different times with but little success, until Dr. Bouley some months ago undertook to eradicate it, and that successfully.

The members of the literary society spent Monday evening very profitably in the study of Longfellow. Readings from his choicest works were given by Miss Crane, Miss Walker and Miss Clark, and Philip Story delivered John D. Long's tribute to the poet in a manner very enjoyable to the company and creditable to himself. Miss Green read the weekly editorial, which proved to be not the least enjoyable part of the programme. Next Monday evening will be devoted to Will Carlton's works.

A New Postmaster.

Richard Twiss has been appointed to succeed Mr. Trudeau as postmaster in this place. The appointment is a very suitable one, as Mr. Twiss is a bright young man of excellent habits and a good share of business ability, which qualities adapt him to discharge the important duties of the position with satisfaction to the public and with credit to himself. The office will be located in quarters to be built by Shaw Bros. at the west end of their store.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

Attempted Suicide.

Carl Gustavson, a Swede living at south Monson and employed by D. W. Ellis & son, has been in a critical condition since Saturday night from the effects of knife wounds near his heart. He claims that on Saturday evening, while returning from Palmer with several companions, when near north Monson he committed the deed himself, but whether accidentally or not is a question, as the members of the party were all more or less under the influence of liquor. Gustavson will probably recover. The report is now that Gustavson attempted to kill himself because of the faithlessness of a sweetheart in Sweden whom he was expecting to marry. The story is that before leaving the old country Gustavson was much in love with a maiden in his native place, and that she agreed to marry him when he had secured money enough. He was saving and from time to time sent her money. Saturday night he went to Palmer to see his mother, who came from Worcester, and from her learned that the girl on whom he had been lavishing his affections and hard-earned dollars was the wife of another man. He tried to drown his sorrow in drink, and after getting in a pretty good "jag" thought he would end his troubles with a knife, but did not succeed, as he will probably recover.

A Thanksgiving Day Wedding.

Arthur J. Purcell of Norwood and Miss Dora E. Webber of Monson were married at 3 o'clock in the afternoon of Thanksgiving Day by Rev. F. S. Hatch at his residence, after which a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents on Pearl street, at which only relatives were present. The bride's wedding dress was of tan colored silk, and her traveling dress a blue serge trimmed with velvet, with hat to match. There were many presents, among them an enameled clock, a fine center table and cover, a silver cream pitcher, silver spoons, and numerous other articles of silver all of a useful character. The young couple will reside in Norwood, where Mr. Purcell's business is, and where he is connected with many of the secret societies.

Assaulted on the Highway.

While Thomas Crowley was on his way home from Palmer on foot last Friday evening he was assaulted near the Fay bridge by eight men, but managed to escape without injury. He had reached Palmer from Boston on the 8.46 train and started to walk home; just after crossing the Fay bridge he was seized by two men, six others also appearing, some of them displaying knives, and all of them talking in a foreign tongue. No violence was offered him, and soon Mr. Crowley broke away and quickly left the crowd in the rear. He thinks the men were Italians and had been drinking. Having escaped without injury and having no means of identifying his assailants, Mr. Crowley made no complaint in the matter, and nothing has been done.

New Quarters for the Father Mathew Temperance Society.

At a special meeting of the Father Mathew Temperance Society, held last Friday evening, it was voted to procure rooms in Day's block. The new apartments will be the ones formerly occupied by the Home Circle, and will be handsomely fitted up. The location will not be quite as central as before, but will be convenient to the library and railroad station. J. M. Fagan is president and James Maguire secretary of the society.

The Business Outlook.

It looks as if Monson would not see such hard times this winter as have been freely predicted. Business in the most of the mills and shops is good, and the prospects are encouraging for more rather than less. Both straw shops are rushing things, Ellis's mill commenced running on full time Monday, and it is reported that the Reynolds mills will soon start up.

Frank Royce has captured over 40 'coons this season.

The firemen cleared about $50 from their ball last week.

John Chaffee had a new harness stolen from his barn some two weeks ago and is unable to find any clue as to the guilty parties.

Marcus Keep Woman's Relief Corps will hold a regular meeting next Wednesday evening and elect officers for the ensuing year.

About 50 workmen have been discharged at the quarry of the W. N. Flynt Granite Co., leaving about the customary winter force employed.

Elluring Delphy has purchased of Mr. Bolter the William Stacy farm on Moulton Hill, and expects to take possession about the first of April.

Mrs. George Homer and two children of Somersville, Ct., have been spending several days with Mrs. Oliver Homer. They returned home Monday.

The marriage of Miss Ida Royce and Clayton Lyon, both of Monson, took place Nov. 22 at the residence of the Episcopal clergyman at Stafford Springs.

Frank F. Maguire has contracted with W. N. Flynt to lay a water pipe on Pleasant street, and will soon have running water and a bathroom in his house.

The remains of the Heimann & Lichten boarding house are being made into a storehouse for the use of the firm, Marcy of Palmer having the contract.

There are several changes in the corps of teachers in the schools. Charles L. Jewett is at the Munn district, Miss Corbin at the Pease, and Miss Marion Anderson at North Monson.

The school attendance for November was very good. It was 99 per cent at Miss Galivan's with only one case of tardiness, and 98 per cent each at Miss Loggie's and Miss Anderson's.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of the Methodist church held a sociable Wednesday evening with an attendance of about 125. The entertainment consisted of vocal and instrumental music, and was followed by a spelling match.

A Democratic caucus was held Tuesday evening and the following town committee chosen for the ensuing year: D. D. Maney, Joseph F. Coyle, N. A. Bugbee, Omar Bradway, N. L. Hanley, D. H. Scanlon, William E. Cantwell, D. P. Nelligan and F. D. Beach.

Edward M. Peck of High street has accepted a position as bookkeeper with an electrical firm in Shenandoah, Pa., and will start for there Tuesday. He will be greatly missed by many of the young people of the town, and their kindest wishes follow him.

A meeting of the school committee was held last Friday evening, at which it was voted to give the No. 6 school, lately left vacant by the resignation of Miss Laura Sutcliffe, to Charles L. Jewett of Lowell, formerly principal of the Green street school.

At a meeting of the savings bank trustees Saturday evening it was voted to make some changes in the rooms lately hired by the Windsor Club in the Bank block, greatly increasing the size of one room. The new apartments of the club are elegantly furnished.

Master Howard, son of Dr. and Mrs. Gould of Brooklyn, who has been spending some months with Mrs. Welcome Converse, has so far recovered from his long and dangerous illness as to return home Tuesday. Mrs. Converse accompanied him, and will remain through the winter.

The supper and entertainment given at the Congregational church Tuesday evening was well attended, and proved a very enjoyable occasion in spite of the weather. The entertainment savored of novelty, being called "Pictures from Life," consisting of tableaux, the parts being taken by the young people of the church.

One of the most valuable additions to Mr. Flynt's park during the past year is the museum which is just completed. The building cost over $750, and is 60 by 30. In the building Mr. Flynt intends to keep a collection of antiquities comprising old coins, firearms, and some relics of the Revolutionary and civil wars. Mr. Flynt has among his possessions a rare collection of books dating back to the year 1737. He is very anxious to increase his collection, and here is a chance for many to benefit the public by donating articles of interest.

Editor Journal:—Once upon a time, as the story books say, I was traveling in one of the Western states, being in a certain city on a day when an exhibition of a monster whale was advertised and claimed to be the "greatest show on earth." I walked to the pavilion, dead-headed my way in as a newspaper man, and was conducted by the proprietor to the best position for taking observations of the gigantic mammal. In conversation with the proprietor I inquired if he hailed from New York city. "Bless you, no," said he. "A first-class exhibit of this kind never was started from New York. I live in Monson, Mass., when at home, but secured this leviathan, 60 feet long, weighing 40 tons, in Provincetown." Years have passed since, and not till last week had I seen the plucky whale showman. Being in Monson I met a face I had once seen, and entering into conversation soon found my quandam whale exhibitor of years ago. I found a pleasant village with good sidewalks and a genial, social people. I judged by the gatherings at and in front of the post office that the young people must have a large correspondence, as the predominence of young people was peculiarly noticeable. The male portion seemed to be painting the sidewalk brown with tobacco juice, and the color of the paint on the other sex I will not attempt to describe. Monson seems to have been cut out for a much larger town, but the indifference of the people in providing for an emergency in case of fire is unpardonable. With the springs of water on either hillside (as I am told) it would seem as if a prudent, thoughtful, yet conservative mind would not only suggest but put into effect some system of prevention in case of conflagration. With all its many and varied pleasing interests and industries, yet no adequate means of conquering the fire fiend. I formed many pleasant acquaintances in Monson, liked the hotel and its accommodations, viewed the village from the Flynt Park eminence, and left the place with favorable impressions of its people, save that I fear that they are not as fond of water and waterworks as they should be. AMI WHITE.

Academy Notes.

Hammond Hall was indeed the scene of festivity during the Thanksgiving vacation, as Stephanoff, '95, the student from Bulgaria entertained his sister, Katrina Stephanoff of Moody's school at Northfield, and L. K. Kuchenoff, a freshman in Amherst College.

——The class of '96 has appointed a committee of three, Miss Grace L. Cushman, W. O. Watkins and Horace W. Cristy, to procure a classpin.——Public rhetoricals will occur next Friday evening at 7.30, in the Academy chapel. Every effort is being made to make these exercises interesting and instructive, and at the same time place before the public an average of the work done. All citizens of Monson and vicinity are invited to these exercises.——The Lino society will hold its last meeting of the term to-night and the following programme will be carried out: "Topics of the day, for the week ending Dec. 1. James E. Glosson; for the week ending Dec 8, Leonard A. Prouty; debate, "Resolved, that whatever injures labor injures capital as well," affirmative, George H. Stone, negative, A. Olin Griggs; essay, Harry Needham; reading, Carl M. Blair.——The class of of '95 held a meeting Wednesday evening and elected the following officers: president, George W. Brown; vice president, Mabel E. Tucker; secretary, Miss Alice M. King; treasurer, F. L. Moores; executive committee, Miss L. Rathburn, Carl M. Blair, F. A. Morris. The class also voted to have a class ring with a suitable inscription, and Miss Kate Parker, James W. Chism and Miss Alice M. King were appointed a committee to report on designs and prices. The class dues are to be $200 a year payable monthly, and the motto is "Onward and Upward," written in Greek.

LUDLOW.

Austin E. Moore, formerly shipper for the Ludlow Manufacturing Company, died yesterday, the immediate cause being a paralytic shock last week which shut off the action of the heart, though he has been an invalid for ten years. A wife and two children, son and daughter, survive him. Mr. Morse was a member of Brigham lodge of Masons, under whose direction the funeral will take place Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Word has been received from Colorado Springs that Henry Cutler of North Wilbraham has just presented Colorado College with $7500. In the letter which accompanied the gift he said: "The depression of Colorado's mining dependence should certainly attract the sympathy of all good men to stand by her institutions upon which the best interests of the state depend." Mr. Cutler is among the oldest of the friends of Colorado College, having been a member of the board of trustees since its establishment in 1874, and Cutler academy was named in his honor.

WILBRAHAM.

The Young People's Christian Society of the Academy has purchased a new organ, for use in its meetings.

The Springfield District Grange will meet with the Wilbraham Grange next Wednesday evening in the chapel of the Congregational church.

Thanksgiving Day was well enjoyed at the Academy. After an excellent dinner the following toasts were responded to, Prof. A. M. Austin being toastmaster: "The day we celebrate," Miss M. A. Wythe; "Our friends at home," Miss Louise Fordham; "The societies at Wesleyan," George W. Carman; "Athletics," A. T. Davison; "Our academy," Principal W. R. Newhall. In the evening there was a social gathering in Fisk Hall.

WEST WARREN.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Brooks and daughters left for their home Monday morning.

Mrs. William Nebert and daughter returned Wednesday from a week's visit with friends in Taunton and Millbury.

The snow and ice storm of Tuesday made lively work for the blacksmiths around town, and gave the people good sleighing.

The praying band and a large number of young people of the M. E. church attended the revival service at Warren Wednesday evening.

C. C. Cutler's new house on the site of the one burned last winter looks well. It is now being covered, but will not be ready for occupancy before spring.

Solon Aiken, who has been in the employ of the Warren Cotton Mills corportion for the past 20 years, died Saturday night of pneumonia. Mr. Aiken leaves two daughters and a son. The burial was Tuesday, at Ware.

BRIMFIELD.

Rev. Mr. Kyte is confined to the house by illness.

Miss Lydia Hitchcock has returned home after an absence of six weeks.

The remains of Mrs. Jason Morse of Michigan were brought to town Wednesday for interment.

George M. Hitchcock and wife spent Thanksgiving with their daughter, Mrs. Frank Boardman of Meriden, Ct.

Charles Shephard, a lad of 15 years, resiling at Thomas Morgan's, was drowned while skating on Morgan's pond Tuesday. The body was recovered and the remains were taken to Turners Falls for burial.

Master Albert Converse entertained a party to the number of 16 Thanksgiving evening from 6 to 9 o'clock. An elaborate supper was served for the lads and lassies during the evening, and they marched to the dining-room to the sound of a drum.

BELCHERTOWN.

John West, son of Howard West, is studying for the ministry.

C. E. Davis has the contract to paint the Chase building at Amherst.

The place owned by R. E. Fairchild will be sold at auction to-morrow.

Mrs. Foster, widow of Jacob Foster, died last Friday after a short illness.

The 11-years-old daughter of Mr. Granfield, living in the east part of the town, died last Saturday of the measles.

An engineer is to be employed to make a survey of the various proposed ways of obtaining a water supply for the village.

Rev. W. S. Woolworth of the Congregational church has received a call to the Foster avenue church of New York city.

Mrs. G. F. Lincoln has gone to the hospital in Boston for treatment for nervous troubles, with which she has suffered for a long time.

The Farmers' and Mechanics' Club will hold a meeting in the town hall next Tuesday evening, and will be addressed by Prof. Brooks of Amherst on "Dairy Farming."

Senator G. H. B. Greene reached home last Saturday from Chicago with the body of his daughter Rachel, who went to Chicago in August for her health, but grew worse. Mr. Greene went last week to bring his daughter home, but at Syracuse the journey was ended for her.

Vernon lodge, F. and A. M., made choice of these officers Monday: W. M., W. H. Bridgman; S. W., D. C. Nutting; J. W., H. Paine; T., W. E. Bridgman; S., J. W. Jackson; C., L. A. Smith; C. M., W. F. Carter; S. D., W. S. Clark; J. D., W. W. Horton; S. S., C. A. Rhodes; J. S., W. Orlando; O., G. C. Allen; T., E. F. Smith.

E. J. Griggs post of the Grand Army has elected these officers: C., H. C. West; S. V., William Handy; J. V. C., L. W. Gleason; Q. M., Solomon Shumway; surgeon, E. F. Smith; chaplain, W. F. White; O. D., F. G. Shaw; O. G., C. B. Knowlton; delegate to encampment, F. G. Shaw; alternate, L. W. Gleason; adjutant and Q. M. S. to be appointed.

HAMPDEN.

Ned Lynes and Mary Brennan were married at Monson the day before Thanksgiving, and returned to town Friday. Saturday evening their friends had a dance and reception in honor of the newly-married couple at Academy Hall.

Thanksgiving Day was very quiet, some going out of town, while others entertained at home. Among the latter was the family of William Leach, who could boast of what few others in the state could, that their Thanksgiving fixings were all baked in an old-fashioned brick oven, and to those who know Mrs. L. it would be needless to say that the day was a success.

All the schools in town commenced Monday with the exception of the advanced grade in district No. 1, where it is said a man teacher is wanted for discipline. The scholars in No. 4 have been taken to the Center, but are having a school in their own district, but as some of the committee have advocated in a similar case that it was better for the scholars to be taken to the graded schools, it is suspected to be about as much for the interest of the teacher as scholars that a school is kept there.

An Epidemic of Diphtheria.

Mr. and Mrs. Elliott Bradway are sorely afflicted in the death of their four youngest children, all dying with diphtheria within eleven days. A sister of Mr. Bradway is very sick with the same dread disease. The disease first made its appearance a few weeks ago in the family of J. C. Root, Mr. Root dying from it. No other case was reported to the board of health and no further trouble was anticipated, but four weeks ago the nine-years-old son of Elliott R. Bradway was attacked with what was looked upon as a mild case of the disease, but after a day or two the patient became dangerously sick, although finally recovering. The next to be attacked were the three girls of the family, 10, 12 and three years old. The two eldest are recovering, but the youngest died after a sickness of three days, the disease assuming a most malignant form, the membrane appearing not only in the pharynx and larynx, but on the roof of the mouth and in a wound on the hand. An infant of seven months was next attacked and died in two days. A boy of six years followed, and then another 20 months old, the latter living only 24 hours. In all the cases the disease took the form of diphtheretic croup. Out of this family of eight children four have died within eleven days.

WARREN.

The Woman's Board met with Mrs. Barker Ramsdell Wednesday.

Miss Nina Gould and Miss Alice Buck have taken positions as teachers in Wales.

The Blake Pump Co. will remove some of the heaviest machinery to Somerville, and have the heavy work done at the shop in that place.

A ball is to be held in the town hall on the evening of the 29th. Russell's Orchestra of Fitchburg will furnish music, and Boston parties will cater.

The bicycle club has leased the old skating rink, and will fit it up for a gymnasium, the place being the sporting headquarters for the club during the winter.

Patrick Hartnett and two others met with an accident Wednesday evening while on the way from West Warren. The horse was thrown and the sleigh overturned and smashed, but the occupants were not seriously hurt.

An alarm of fire Saturday night was caused by the explosion of a lamp in Mr. Dawson's harness shop, but he threw blankets on the fire and smothered it, preventing further damage. The loss was covered by insurance in the Lincoln agency.

Crescent Division of the Sons of Temperance will hold a social in Crescent Hall next Tuesday evening. A large delegation is expected from North Brookfield, and will furnish the entertainment. Refreshments will be furnished by Caterer Keith.

A reunion of the World's Fair visitors and their friends will be held at Hotel Ramsdell this evening. Conversation groups will occupy the first hour, and at 9 supper will be served in the dining rooms, after which there will be toasts, followed by a fine assortment of stereopticon views. A very pleasant time is anticipated.

Clara Barton post of the Grand Army elected these officers at the meeting Wednesday evening: Commander, N. D. Joyce; senior vice, William S. Stearn; junior vice, S. W. Bridge; quartermaster, Lyman W. Powers; chaplain, Lovell L. Gage; surgeon, Jonah H. Brown; O. D., L. W. Gilbert; O. G., Philip Jennings; delegate, Lovell L. Gage. The officers will be publicly installed Wednesday evening, January 3, by Emerson Stone of Spencer.

The Universalists held their annual fair Wednesday and Thursday evenings. The "Seven Ages of Fair Women" in appropriate costumes were represented. Among the pleasant things were the post office, Grandmother Grab, and souvenir china. An oyster supper was served Wednesday evening, followed by the "Pied Piper." Thursday evening a salad supper was served, and the "Bellamy Quadrille" was danced by young ladies in costume.

WARE.

Andrew J. Davis, ex-postmaster, has this week received his commission as deputy sheriff, to take the place of Henry O. Caryl, deceased.

The announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Ida R. Naylor, daughter of Thomas Naylor, to S. W. Coe, of the firm of Coe & Naylor.

Applications are coming in thick and fast for the position of janitor in some of the public schoolhouses. An extra hand is made necessary by the addition of the new high school building to those to be cared for.

G. W. Bragg of Gilbertville was found unconscious beside the track about half way to Ware on Saturday afternoon. He was taken to Ware, and when he recovered said he had been hit by a passing train. He was not much hurt.

The souvenir booklet of photographic views of Beaver Lake and the house of the Ware Rod and Gun Club is expected to be ready for delivery early next week. A few extra copies have been printed, and may be had if called for soon.

Ira Barlow, aged 88 years, died at his home on Church street on Wednesday. He was born in West Brookfield and lived for many years in the southwest part of New Braintree where he owned an excellent farm. He was quiet and unassuming, but a man of good taste and judgment, and was greatly respected by all who knew him.

Rev. W. H. Adams of Enfield will preach in the Methodist church next Sunday morning. The subject of the sermon by the pastor in the evening is to be "The Prohibition of the Importation, Manufacture and Sale of Intoxicating Liquors." Services at 7 o'clock. There will be singing by a mixed quartette and a children's chorus. "The Flowers of the Field" is the subject of the children's service at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Ladies, clean your kid gloves with Josephine glove cleaner, for sale only by Mrs. L. E. Carpenter, headquarters for all the latest novelties in fine millinery and fancy goods, kid gloves and notions. 52-32

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

No better preparation for the hair has ever been invented than Ayer's Hair Vigor. It restores the original color to faded and gray hair, and imparts that natural gloss and freshness every one so much admires. Its reputation is world-wide.

"When your heart is bad, and your head is bad, and you are bad clean through, what is needed?" asked a Sunday school teacher of her class. "I know—Ayer's Sarsaparilla," spoke up a little girl, whose mother had recently been restored to health by that medicine.

Forbes & Wallace's.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., December, 1893.

A description of the store under its new conditions will be sent to those who say they wish it.

We have secured models of the famous Ferris wheel and Norweigan Viking ship, two of the most wonderful things at the World's Fair. They are now in operation here.

We have also secured the original statue of justice modelled after Ada Rehan. This is of solid silver and its bullion value is $64,800. It will be here in a month or two.

December is the book harvest; and our book catalogue is the reaper.

Would you like a copy sent?

It is made up with our prices (not the publishers); and contains a list of most all the new Holiday books as well as most of the old favorites.

It will save you money on books, wherever you are.

The cloak department is now located on the ground floor of the new building, next to millinery.

We did wonders in the old place. We are going to do a different sort of wonders in the new. Then we sold odds and ends from the bargain tables from half-price up. Now we are going to sell odds and ends from the racks from half-price down.

We shall sell some coats, too low for business, too low for any other purpose than to sweep out, as a whirlwind, large masses of good, merchantable, new, and every way acceptable coats. We should say strictly first-class coats, but for the fact that we want to keep that phrase for what this sale will leave behind. It is first-class, speaking in common language. It is not first-class in comparison with the rest of our stock; and yet you are not smart enough to tell the difference; nor are we—we find out the differenee from you though, day by day, in selling. First-class means that which sells as fast as we can show it. Not first-class means that which has to be shown twice to sell it.

Relief for Rheumatism.

"This information," said a well known physician to a correspondent of the TELEGRAM, "may save many lives; at any rate it will prove an invaluable boon to people suffering from rheumatism in any form."

"Rheumatism is caused by acidity of the blood. It should never be neglected. This remedy, as I know, by long practice, is very efficacious, and it is as simple as it is powerful.

"Here it is," he added: "When a rheumatic twinge is experienced, the patient should buy a bottle of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and take one teaspoonful in one-half glass of hot or cold water as best suits the action of the bowels, three times a day, and continue the same daily until the last vestige of the malady has disappeared. That is all there is to it, but if taken as I have prescribed, it will save suffering humanity many doctors' bills, to say nothing of pains, aches and swellings. I've never known it to fail."—Albany N. Y., Telegram.

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING,

EPPS'S COCOA

BREAKFAST—SUPPER.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided for breakfast and supper a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We can escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette. Made simply with boiling water or milk. A YOUNG GIRL'S FORTUNE.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

Nothing appeals so strongly to a mother's affection as her daughter just budding into womanhood. Following is an instance: "Our daughter, Blanche, now 15 years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the entire use of her right arm. She was in such a condition that we had to keep her from school and abandon her music lessons. In fact, we feared St. Vitus dance, and are positive but for an invaluable remedy she would have had that terrible affliction. We had employed physicians, but she received no benefit from them. The first of last August she weighed but 75 pounds, and although she has taken only three bottles of Nervine she now weighs 106 pounds; her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and studies with comfort and ease. She has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid, and no money could procure for our daughter the health Dr. Miles' Nervine has brought her.

When my brother recommended the remedy I had no faith in patent medicines, and would not listen to him, but as a last resort he sent us a bottle, we began giving it to Blanche, and the effect was almost immediate."—Mrs. R. R. Bullock, Brighton, N. Y.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

The Fable That Caused the Craze.

Once at a yearly chrysanthemum show
Wandered a dude, tall in stature and thin.
Pinned on his coat a chrysanthemum large
Completely obscured him from lapel to chin.
So proud was this dude as he strutted about,
Of the elegant specimen pinned on his breast,
That he stroked it with pleasure, which caused it to feel
As big, if not bigger than all of the rest.

So it fluffed itself out, and it puffed itself out
While it stretched its long stem nearly double its length.
And the dude watched with wonder its marvelous growth
Till at last, to support it, took all of his strength:
So he dropped in a seat just behind a large plant,
The fairest by far in the whole of the show;
But soon became scared, for his wonderful "Chrys"
Was equal in size in a moment or so.

Along came a maiden with purse filled with gold.
And instantly purchased the marvellous gem,
She saw not the dude, who, so slender and tall,
Was completely enclosed in the still-growing stem.
They shipped them that night to the maiden's address,
Who let them remain in the parlor all night,
While the dude from embarrassment fainted away,
But revived as the sun showed its first rays of light.

To get out of this queer situation he found,
As he surmised, was not easy at all.
But 't was ambitious pride that had brought him to this,
And he knew well that pride oftentimes had a fall.
So he lectured on Pride's foolish whims and results,
Till the overgrown blossom could stand it no more;
So it shriveled and shrunk to its natural size,
And the dude, half exhausted sank down on the floor.

An hour or two later the maiden came down
To care for her treasure; but there in its stead,
Stood a stylish young man who went down on his knee;
And her cheeks at first blanched, soon were blushing and red.
So now, when you see in the fall of the year,
Our girls with chrysanthemums recently bought,
You may know that to-morrow they'll rise with the sun,
And rush to the parlor to see what they've got!

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

when we are obliged to give TWO for ONE and even more in many cases, regardless of the loss. We opened this Reduction Sale Dec. 1.

This reduction covers every article in our entire stock. Not one dollar less than $100,000.00

will satisfy us for the month of December. This loss we anticipated, as our season's profit. Our season's buying has been on the "Spot Cash" system from importers and manufacturers at about half value or less. Nothing but "Spot Cash" can do our present business. The long credit business must be done by firms who get long prices and slower returns. Odd and behind style garments will be sold for

HALF OF HALF PRICE

All of which will give honest service for a nominal price.

We have a Bureau of Correspondence. All letters of inquiry promptly answered.

All orders accompanied with Bank Checks and P. O. Orders filled within an hour, and money refunded if not satisfactory. We do not issue catalogs or cuts, as it is impossible with a stock that changes every week.

HAZEN'S PLANNED BALLOON VOYAGE.

Prof. Hazen of the United States weather bureau is going to make an aerial voyage across the Atlantic after a novel plan. He will travel with a balloon, but it will be formed of strange material and equipped with devices hitherto unheard of. It will be directed by means of propellers and a rudder, and is expected to stay afloat two weeks or more, though the trans-oceanic trip may require only 50 hours. The enterprise will be paid for out of private funds, but such instruments as are required for meteorological and other scientific observations will be furnished by the government.

The balloon will be a small one, comparatively speaking. Nearly every aeronaut who has contemplated a project of this sort has supposed a monster air-ship, holding from 200,000 to 400,000 cubic feet of gas, to be requisite. Prof. Hazen considers such a hugh machine unnecessary and on many grounds undesirable. It is enormously heavy, very difficult to handle, almost impossible to make gas-tight, and costs a great sum of money. An envelope containing 100,000 cubic feet should be plenty big enough for a voyage to Europe. If enough cash for the purchase of such a one cannot be got, the attempt may be made in a balloon of 50,000 cubic feet.

The chief difficulty met with in aerial voyages is leakage of gas. But science has recently learned how to construct balloons that will not leak. At all events, such gasbags are now made in Europe which lose gas only at the rate of one-half of 1 per cent a day. The signal office has already purchased one of this description. The material used is goldbeaters' skin, which is obtained from a part of the intestines of the ox, called the "caecum." It is somewhat more costly than cotton or even silk, but it is superior for the purpose in many ways. The main point is that a tight balloon can be made of it, which is not practicable with any other substance hitherto tried.

The goldbeaters' skin comes in small sheets, the biggest obtainable being 22 by 10 inches. It looks somewhat like oiled tissue to the eye, but is not porous. Six layers put together make about the thickness of letter-paper, with nearly about the same weight as silk. However, four thicknesses will serve for a balloon, the sheets being overlaid upon each other in such a way that there are no joints or seams. The first step in the construction of the balloon is to make a cloth bag of exactly the same size required, which is oiled and inflated. Then the goldbeaters' skin is laid over the outside of it, one thickness at a time, being made to adhere in a manner which is as yet a secret. Finally the cloth bag is taken out and you have your balloon.

The balloon will be filled with hydrogen, which has a lifting power of 70 pounds for each 1000 cubic feet. The bag contemplated to hold 100,000 cubic feet will thus have a total lifting power of 7000 pounds. It is estimated that the whole aerial machine, including the net, basket, drag-rope, anchor, etc., will weigh 800 pounds. Three men will add a weight of 450 pounds, and 250 pounds more may be allowed for provisions and water. This reckoning leaves a margin of 5500 pounds, which would be taken along as ballast in the shape of sand in bags. The balloon ought not to lose more than one-half of 1 per cent of gas in 24 hours. If it lost as much as 1 per cent it would probably do 10 times as well as any other that has ever been built in the United States. It should keep afloat 30 days, whereas it is likely that no balloon was ever made in this country of its weight that would stay in the air more than two days. It is most important that the aeronaut should be able to place his balloon at any level of the atmosphere he pleases. Of course, the currents of air at various elevations commonly flow in different directions. There may be an unfavorable wind at 1000 feet, and at the same time just the right breeze may blow at 10,000 feet. The currents of the latter altitude are always blowing from west to east across the Atlantic, and for that reason there should be no difficulty in accomplishing the trip quickly. Prof. Haven thinks of taking with him a small pilot balloon, which may be run up to the hight of a mile above the great gasbag, so as to ascertain the direction of the breeze at a higher level without taking the trouble to ascend in order to find out.

It is proposed to employ means of a simple nature for directing and propelling the balloon. There will be no complicated machinery, but merely a rudder and propellers. The latter will be worked by man power, very likely by the feet, bicycle fashion. Probably the propeller shaft will be made to project both ways, having a screw in front and a screw behind, thus getting double power and incidentally preserving the balance. The problem of propelling balloons has already been solved to some extent. In France such air-ships have succeeded in traveling in the teeth of a 15-mile wind. All that is needed for the purpose is the proper mechanism, and experiments in that direction are being made.

It is too early to say from what point the start for Europe will be made. Very likely it will be from New York, but some point farther south would be better, such as Charlestown.

The attempt will not be made without trying a preliminary voyage from Denver to New York, or perhaps from San Francisco to New York. If that can be accomplished, there should be no difficulty about crossing the ocean. To come back across the Atlantic would not be practicable, because the air currents are in the opposite direction. In order to return by balloon, it would be necessary to go all around the world, reaching San Francisco by way of the Pacific. Prof. Hazen thinks there is no reason why balloon voyages around the globe should not be made some day. He believes that the North pole will eventually be arrived at by aerial navigation. The professor's air-ship, holding 100,000 cubic feet of gas, will cost $5000 or $6000. He can get one with a capacity of 50,000 cubic feet for $3000. One of his ideas is to make the basket a life-boat, so that it will serve for a journey by water in case of accident to the balloon.—Washington Letter in Boston Transcript.

BRIDAL COUPLES UNDOUBTEDLY.

A good story is told by one of the clerks of a hotel near the Treasury on a bride and groom who were here a few days ago from a Western state.

The clerks at this hotel have acquired a national reputation for their ability to "spot" bridal couples immediately on their arrival. It appears to make no difference how calm and composed the groom may endeavor to appear, or how indifferent and absolutely at home the bride seems, the clerks have some means of ascertaining that the couple has not been traveling in double harness very long. When the bride and groom referred to arrived at this hotel the other day, the clerk on duty happened to notice that the gentleman paid the cabman who brought him from the depot two fares.

The lady, of course, stopped in the parlor, while the gentleman walked up to the desk in the office and nervously wrote his name on the register. The clerk waited a few seconds to see whether the guest had any addition to make on the book, and then inquired, politely:

"Haven't you forgotten something?"

"How's that?" said the man, his face flushing and his head dropping low on his breast.

"Are you traveling alone now?" questioned the clerk, smiling significantly at the embarrassed guest.

"No, of course not," stammered the man, as he grabbed the pen again. "How very stupid of me!" and he added the words "and wife" to his signature on the register. "You see," continued the guest, that is the first time I ever wrote that, and I am not used to it yet."

"Oh, you'll catch on to these little things before long," replied the clerk, as he assigned the couple to the bridal apartments, "and then you'll wonder how you ever managed to live singly so long."

In another uptown hotel a groom recently became very indignant because the clerk insinuated that he was a newly married man.

"How did you know I had just been married?" thundered the angry guest, who thought he had successfully concealed the fact from everybody.

"Oh, I didn't know it," replied the clerk, calmly, "but the chambermaid said she swept up a quart of rice off the floor of your room this morning, and I noticed a lot of white ribbon tied to your trunk when the porter carried it up to your room yesterday."

The guest had nothing further to say on the subject.—Washington Post.

POST-HOLES DUG BY LIGHTNING.

The man with the ginger beard was watching his neighbor laboriously digging post holes.

"They didn't dig 'em that way out in Colorado where I lived," said he.

The neighbor, who was a hired man, dropped his patent "digger," looked around to see if his employer was visible, found he was not, and took a seat on the ground, ready to listen. "How did you work it?" he asked. "By steam?"

"Steam?" said the man with the ginger beard. "Naw. Done it by lightning."

"Lightning?"

"Yas. You see in the part of the state I was in they is no metals of any kind in the ground and no trees. I've often watched the lightning cavortin' around in the heavens fer a hour at a time, jist achin' fer somethin' to strike at; but not bein' able to do so 'cause they wasn't nothin' they could take a start at—no attraction, you see. Well, one day I was a-sweatin' away, just like you would be if the boss was around now, when a old feller, that lived there before I come, come along and says he'd show me a scheme to save all that work. You can bet I was willin' so he sends me to the house fer a bag o' ten-penny nails, and he plants a nail in every place I marked fer a hole. 'They is a storm comin',' says he, 'and if I hain't mistakened she is a-goin' to do the job in one whirl.' I didn't say nothing, fer, honest, I thought he wuz crazy, an' I 'lowed I'd better humor him. After he got all the nails planted he dragged me away to a safe distance an' told me to watch her work. Pretty soon the storm came along, with more thunder an' lightnin' in it than you would see here in a month o' Sundays. Directly it got over them nail's. Then—biff! blam! It went to pluggin' away at them there nails stuck in the ground, the most delightedst lightnin' you ever see to git somethin' to shoot at. And ev-ry time she hit there was the neatest post hole dug out you ever see. I did haf to trim a few of 'em up with a spade, but as a gineral thing they was as neat as a body would want to look at. Natur' is mighty useful if you know how to handle her."—Indianapolis Journal.

A Christmas Song.

Hark! the gladsome Christmas music,
Ringing, ringing in the air!
Hosts of happy children's voices,
Singing, singing everywhere;
Clear they raise
Joyful lays
In Jesus' praise.

Lo! while infant lips are sending
Pleasure, pleasure through the earth,
Hoary heads in worship bending,
Treasure, treasure Jesus' birth,
That of old,
Angels told
To shepherd bold.

Angels sang Messiah's story,
Thrilling, thrilling all on high;
Sped the eastern star of glory,
Filling, filling earth and sky
With a light
Wondrous bright,
Rejoicing night.

Magi brought their mystic treasure.
Showing, showing Christ was born,
Mary knew a mother's pleasure;
Glowing, glowing Christmas morn!
Garlands bring,
Carols sing,
For Christ is King.

Meekly cradled in a manger,
Sleeping, sleeping Jesus lay,
King of kings, yet homeless stranger,
Keeping, keeping Christmas day.
Gladly tell,
"All is well, Immanuel."

AT TIMBERLINE.

[Copyright, 1891, by New York Dramatic Mirror.]

The train stopped with a creak and a jar at a way station—a forlorn little town far up in the Rockies. From the wooden station a wide street bordered by shambling houses, and stores with high board fronts, and saloons with curious signs, ran back to the hills. The grandeur of the mountains would have dwarfed and rendered insignificant the mightiest city of the world. The earth was a dazzling white, the sky a dazzling blue; where the sun touched, the peaks were polished silver. A fringe of stunted evergreens, weighted with snow, outlined the town. They had achieved the highest place in tree history, but like the mighty of the human race they were lonely in their barren greatness.

There were but six passengers in the one Pullman on the Salt Lake train. A clerical-looking, elderly gentleman with a kindly face, who read a clerical-looking book; a sallow, nervous little man with a Hebrew cast of features who figured innumerable accounts in a small book and never turned his head to look at the scenery; a sick-looking young man, accompanied by a pretty, dark-eyed girl, who called him "Dick" and worried a good deal about his welfare in a wifely sort of way; a blonde girl who read Daudet, and a lank man, with straight black hair and hollow dark eyes, who played solitaire all the time.

The prolonged stop made the party nervous. A crowd of roughly-clothed, bearded men walked up and down the resonant planking outside; some Swedish emigrants, in queer scarfs and caps, came out of the day coach and joined them, and the conductor, in an easy attitude of repose against the wall of the station, conversed with a friend.

"I am going to see what's up," said the sick young man.

"No, you are not, with that cough," said the pretty young woman, decidedly. "It's only another water tank. That engine has a fearful thirst; we've stopped forty times for water during the last hundred miles."

"May be a hot box," yawned the blonde. "Richard, you may play first fiddle in the orchestra, but evidently you don't in your domestic affairs."

"Molly's a regular shrew," said the solemn man, dealing thirteen cards and beginning a new game. "She was meek enough till she got Dickey, then she put on the thumb screws. Women are all cheats."

The Hebrew gentleman could have told you all about the party. He was forced to hear their conversation and regarded them with positive dislike. Molly and Dick were stranded in San Francisco when the Western Opera Company failed. The blonde came to grief with a disbanded farce-comedy in Ogden, and the sallow man had gone down in a wreck of Shakespearean tragedies the year before, but had played the races in California that fall and won a stake to get home. They had very little money, but shared what they had together, making it go as far as they could. The Hebrew gentleman had seen them a while ago counting up to see if they had enough to get Dick some brandy. They were gay in spite of their poverty and dark future—sadly gay, it seemed to him. He called them mentally "show people," and they called him Jay Gould when his back was turned, because he wore diamonds and ate three meals a day. He rang the bell, summoned the porter and asked the cause of the delay. Everybody listened.

'Bin a snow slide on the track foah mile b'low, sah,' said the porter affably. Jay Gould seemed the only passenger who could remember him, and he was all attention.

'Will it delay us long?'

'Doan know, say, yet; may be a day or so.'

'Day!' snorted Jay Gould, and reached for his sable-lined coat. Then he made a bee line for the telegraph sign at the station.

'Jay's worried,' said the dark man, looking up from a combination.

'He may lose a million or two by this delay. Poor soul! I pity him. Say, Fan, are those yellow shoes of yours edible? We've got to eat.'

'Have we got to buffet with Boston baked beans again?' sighed Dick. 'That's the misery of being on this sort of car.'

'You needn't explain the joke,' said the blonde; hunger has sharpened our faculties.'

They were silent awhile; then Molly, looking up from a paper in her lap, said dolefully, 'Do you know what day this is?'

'Friday and the thirteenth,' said the solemn man.

'No, the 24th and Christmas eve.'

'If you are going to give me anything,' said the solemn man, 'don't let it be cigars. I'd rather have an overcoat, thank you.'

'Christmas never gets up to this altitude,' said Dick; 'it's more'n 14,000 feet above sea level. The town looks awfully poor. I don't believe there's a stocking in it to hang up.'

'There is a nice row of little Christmas trees out there on the hill," said Molly, hopefully.

'But no presents on 'em that I see, growled the solemn man.

Outside the air grew colder; behind the mountains the red glory of the setting sun flamed for a brief moment; distant, snowy peak, blushed radiant as the dawn, and the warm glow, for one fleeting glimpse, painted on windows of deserted cabins the light of home.

'I wish,' said Molly, softly, 'that I could hear the chimes now. How beautiful they would sound in this solemn place—or church bells echoing across the snow.'

'I wish I had a good meal,' sighed the blonde, curling up in a more comfortable position; 'they are always eating in books; in this one there is a banquet. I am never going to buy a novel again unless they don't have a meal in it.'

The golden glow faded and a chill gray crept over the landscape, adding new loneliness and desolation. On the summit of the untrodden peaks what awful quiet reigned when black night fell—what cold, what solitude!

Jack Farley, from the Yankee Maid Mine, came out and leaned against the station wall. He had one particular place where he stood and watched the train; no one thought of disputing his right. He ruled the region with a rod of iron, holding sway chiefly through popularity and general reputation for fair-dealing. He was six-feet-two in his boots, brown-bearded, and had handsome dark eyes with a laugh in them. He stood and watched the passengers at the Pullman windows with kindly interest that had no touch of impertinent curiosity. Strangers were rare at Timberline. A pretty young woman came hesitatingly down the car steps and approached him. She was rather pale and poorly dressed, but he did not notice it at first. She seemed to be trying to say something to him, so he took off his hat with a sweeping bow.

'You was sayin', marm,' he said politely.

She blushed prettily—much fairer to watch, he thought, than the sunset just passed.

'You see,' she said nervously, conscious of the smiling faces in the windows, 'we are snowed in here.'

'Which slide we seen from the mine,' he smiled, 'an' I beat the boys by ten minutes in givin' notice here. Come on my mar, the sorrel there.'

She saw a tall, bony horse tied near the station and nodded.

'She—she looks fast,' she said, wishing to be polite. 'And you rode down?"

'I slid, or the mar did; it's down grade an' a glare of ice."

'Perhaps you know it is Christmas eve,' she hesitated. It did sound so silly to her, and he stared so embarrassingly.

'It don't worry us none here, thankee,' he said affably.

'I thought,' she went on quickly, 'or my husband thought' (Jack glanced gloomily at the car) that as this place looked sort of as if nothing particular happened much, and it was generally lonesome, we would give a little entertainment—singing and music and dancing — we are theatrical people — and invite everybody. The women and children in the little houses up there and'—becoming conscious of a number of the bearded men listening just behind her—'all the people that would like to come—if you could get a hall, because we can't afford to pay for one, but would gladly give our services to make a pleasant evening. I guess," with a pathetic smile, 'like us, you folks at Timberline are not overburdened with wealth.'

'Can't allus be winners,' said a horsey looking man behind, in a hoarse tone of approval.

'We are all liable to get down on our luck," she smiled. "I can get along always, but my husband's health is broken down; we have had a hard journey, but he is eager for the music and it gives him pleasure. You must try, though, to have the place warm.'

'We'll have it oven heat,' said Jack warmly. 'There ain't bin no show here for a year. It's mighty good of you folks to think of it. Boys, let's go hustle now. Some of you invite the town folks, and let the boys up to the Good Luck and No Show mines know. I'll see Jim Crowder 'bout his place and then git up to the Yankee Maid and fetch the gang down. You won't, marm,' said Jack awkwardly, 'have no objections to playin' in a gamblin' place ef we cleans the layout away?'

'Why no,' she answered merrily, 'not the least, I—I have played poker a little myself.'

'I'll lay odds you win,' chuckled the horsey man.

'Sometimes,' she said blushing, and they shambled off back of the station, where a moment later she saw them dashing up the street at a gallop on calico colored broncbos.

'Crowder will be square 'bout the place,' said Jack, unfastening the sorrel, who pranced viciously. 'Chinese and all invited, and the name of them as don't come will be Dennis in this camp.

'I don't want to drive people in.'

'Oh, there's them that kicks at everythin',' said Jack scornfully, 'and roughs as wants to be funny. But Jim will see to them; he's mighty easy in his ways—quietest man with a gun I ever see.'

'Isn't the ride to your mine dangerous?' she asked as he mounted, and by way of a start the sorrel reared up and came down with a buck.

'Some,' panted Jack. 'That black spot on the mountain side is the mine; trail, long thar—one slip and it's nine hundred feet to stopping. On a dark night it's the ragged edge of nuthin'. S'long, and much obliged to you.'

'Did our long-booted friend propose an elopement?' said Dan, the solemn man, shuffling his cards, as Molly, rosy-cheeked and bright-eyed, entered the car.

'I wouldn't mind, but he only proposed a hall; Jim Crowder's place; a real gambling house, and they were all pleased with the idea of our entertainment.'

'What can I do?' growled Dan. 'They'll guy all my pieces and I don't know but three funny ones.'

'Can't you give a tragic piece in a funny way?' asked Molly, anxiously.

'I generally do ,' said Dan; 'but our clothes, Dicky—the hotel folks in San Francisco have our trunks.'

'I have my stage wardrobe,' smiled the blonde. 'I wore it out under my ulster at Ogden and left some rocks in the trunk. I verily believe skirt-dancing won't be a chestnut here.'

'You'll have a procession of the bearded pards at the stage door,' said Dan. 'You might pick up a millionaire. You can't tell by their clothes up here. There goes Jay Gould uptown; he's sent all the telegrams the man can manage, and now he's going to corner all the provisions and force us to pay starvation prices.'

'There's his reverence walking up the street, too.' said Dick. "Hullo! Our mining friend is talking to him. Suppose his reverence proposes a prayer meeting instead?'

'He may be a bunco man,' said the blonde, 'and Molly's friend is directing him to Crowder's place.'

Jack, who had made satisfactory arrangements with Crowder, saw the clerical-looking gentleman approaching, and, full of the scheme, nearly rode him down in his efforts to tell him. The Reverend Mr. Boice jumped quickly at the sound of horses' hoofs and looked straight in the vicious eye of the sorrel.

'I didn't mean no harm,' said Jack. 'The mar's toppy to-night. I see you comin' and wanted to tell you Jim's all right.'

'I am glad he is,' said the reverend gentleman vaguely, 'if he is suffering.'

'Oh,' grinned Jim, 'you ain't one of the show folks?'

'The party on the train? No; I am a clergyman.'

'You're just the man we want—an honest old duck like you to hold some stakes. We know them show folks is down on their luck and we boys is flush and we're goin' to bring down some dust. You could sort of take tickets, let the town folks in for nothin', but the boys from the mines is all goin' to pay. We'll fix up a little place for ye and ye needn't think where you be. Land! you're just as safe to Jim's as to your own meeting-house. That consumptive needs help, an' his pretty little wife, an' you ain't got much square feelin' if you don't help us out. You do it, an' if you're froze here over Sunday I'll engage to fill the place for a service for ye and you can do all the preachin' you wanter.'

'I don't see why I could not aid you,' said the old man. 'I should be glad to.'

'Thankee,' said Jack heartily, and he galloped off far up that narrow pathway until he was a black speck in the gray of night. The old man stood and watched him. A man who would risk his life to do a kindly act.

'A noble fellow,' said the old man softly; 'a true American or a Westerner. A queer role for me, never in a theater, taking care of the money for theater people in a gambling house; but I—I like it.'

Having vindicated his conscience, the old man went back to the warmth of the car, for the night was bitterly cold, and the lights streaming from the humble homes made a traveler think of his own far fireside and this happy holiday time.

II.

Crowder's place, heated to suffocation, ablaze with lights from a dozen lamps, the objectionable features removed, the bar hidden away, presented a festive appearance. Jim himself, pale, black-eyed, neatly shaved, and wearing black broadcloth, save for his diamond studs, looked more clerical than the Rev. Mr. Boice, whose kindly face beamed over a portion of the bar, fenced in with boards. An ugly-looking revolver Jim had placed at his side the clergyman carefully covered with his hat.

'It's only a bluff,' said Jim anxiously; looks business, but you needn't git scared. I'd lay down my han' ef I couldn't keep order in my own place 'thout no shootin'.'

The audience began to arrive, the townsfolk bearing each his own chair. Even the children brought household treasures in the shape of small rockers, and they had the front row just before the stage, which was improvised from billiard tables. Not many men would have given up an evening's profit for such

On Christmas Eve.

With dancing eyes of brown and blue
I've cousins quite a score,
But none are half so sweet as Prue,
And Prudence I adore;
'Twas Christmas Eve; the ground was white;
The wind made boisterous din;
But all was merriment, and light,
And coziness within.

Fair coz and I had paused by chance
Below the winding stair;
A nook, dim-lighted, met my glance
Behind a wide portiere.
There swung of mistletoe a spray,
A tempting sight to view!
I'd hung it high that very day,
But all unknown to Prue.

We pushed the damask dark aside,
And entered arm in arm;
She saw, and "Oh, you wretch!" she cried,
Which lent the greater charm.
She raised her face, the laughing witch;
(How small a fight she made!)
But why reveal the grace with which
Sweet Prue the forfeit paid?

LURINTHA'S CHRISTMAS.

Miss Lurintha flattened her nose against the pane, and watched the slow progress up the street of a heavy wagon laden with household goods. When it disappeared at the next corner, she set her mouth resolutely, and winked back a rebellious tear or two, as she said to herself:—

"Now, Lurinthy Stebbins, don't you be a fool and bawl. What else could you expect from Adoniram's wife?"

She looked around the dismantled kitchen, and a disdainful smile played for a moment around her lips.

"She only left the cook stove for very shame's sake. One chair is too shabby for her own kitchen—a rickety table I'd ha' turned up my nose at in father's life time, and a handful of old dishes. Well I ain't likely to have much company. Things ain't as they were in father's life-time. If Adoniram had only ha' spunked up a little, and spoke a word in my interests—but what's the good o' worryin? She was jest bound to swoop down on every thing father left, like a—a—hawk on the plains of Jericho—an' swoop she did. It's a queer kind of a custom that gives a son the best pick of everything jest because he is a son!"

Miss Lurintha looked at herself in the little pine-framed glass that had escaped the talons of the hawk. She was by no means ill-favored, although the something sweet

That follows youth with flying feet

had passed beyond her possession long years before. A certain tender gleam came into the bright gray eyes as she smoothed back the thin strands of hair from her temples and said musingly:

"If things had turned out different the day I took that ride to Uncle Jared's, who knows but what—pshaw! that's all past and gone! Thank the Lord I've got my health and strength left and I ain't above working for my living. Boarders would ha' been the very thing, especially since Caldwell's new saw mill has been started, and the men can't bring their families to town yet, but boarders and a stripped house don't 'gree. I might rent the place and go out to do housework. Jest one week ago, when father set here alive and well, eating his supper, he says, 'Lurinthy, your griddle cakes and coffee can't be beat.' And I know I'm a good cook, if I do say it myself. It's coming on nightfall. I suppose I might as well get myself some supper."

She filled her tea-kettle, tied on a calico apron, and started for the cellar to bring up a pitcher of milk and some doughnuts. At the head of the stairs she slipped and fell, and lay a helpless, moaning heap, until the glowing fire in the little cook stove died away to coldness and blackness, and the cheery kettle sang itself into silence.

Adoniram Stebbins cleared his throat nervously, and turned to his wife who towered above him on the wagon seat:

"I—I don't feel's though we'd done jest right by Lurinthy after all, Martha. S'posin' she should be took sick?"

Martha Stebbins cast upon him the look of contemptuous tolerance which a tall, bony woman can so easily cast upon a partner who scarcely reaches to her shoulders, and with a sort of military movement, seized the reins from his hands, gave them a vigorous shake upon old Jerry's toiling flanks, and in tones as crisp and acid as a pickled cucumber, laid the same injunction upon her husband that Miss Lurintha had laid upon herself:

"Now, Adoniram Stebbins, don't you be a fool."

Little Miss Rhodes, the bright-eyed, quick-fingered village milliner, was putting the last swift touches to a crape bonnet, while her new apprentice, a tall and fair girl of 17, was folding ribbons, putting away boxes of artificial flowers, and otherwise straightening up the modest little establishment.

"If I hadn't been so drove," said Miss Rhodes, glancing at the clock which indicated half-past eight, "what with Addie Stillman's wanting her hat facing altered at the last minute—and Mis' Deacon Hollowell sending over word that she must have her velvet poke, whether or no, to drive to Whately in to conference meeting to-morrow, I'd have had time to run up with Miss Lurinda's bonnet myself, and maybe say a word to cheer her up—but I don't mistrust but what you can find the way easy enough, Lily. The second house from Lawyer Pettigrew's—square, with a little peaked roof porch. Tell her not to worry one mite about the money for it till she gets everything else settled up. I can wait."

"All right," said tall, fair 17, with a pleasant ring to her voice, and setting a little brown silk cap on her fair, frizzled hair, she threw her shawl around her, and took the bonnet from Miss Rhodes's hand.

"Seeing it is Saturday night, you may as well stop at the post office and ask for my bazar. Box 128."

"Yes, ma'am," answered Lily, and hurried away.

Miss Lurintha's house was dark and silent. No response came to Lily's gentle knock. "Perhaps she has gone to bed. I can bring the bonnet over in the morning. But first I will look for the back door and try that."

Still no answer. Lily was turning to go, when a faint moan caught her ear from the cellar window. She listened carefully and the moan was repeated—also a sound like a cry for help. Lily bent down and put her mouth to the open cellar window.

"Is anybody hurt down there?"

"Yes. I fell down the steps about 5 o'clock. For pity's sake come in, whoever you be, and help me up. The door is unlocked. The lamp and matches are on the mantle."

Lily lost no time in finding her way in, lighting a lamp, and making haste to the sufferer's side, after opening various doors in other apartments in her search for the cellar way.

"Oh, you're an angel from heaven whoever you be," groaned Miss Lurintha, "and I'm sure you're as beautiful as one—but if you was as ugly as Beelzebub himself I should rejoice to see you all the same. Here, dear child, just set the lamp on that there vinegar cask and put your two arms under mine—so, Oh, you're an angel of light."

After much groaning and tribulation, poor Miss Lurintha was landed at the top of the stairs, and Lily went back for the lamp. She helped Miss Lurintha into the one chair that remained, and the latter, seeing her puzzled look, said:

"Yes. My brother's wife carried off everything but that and the stove, and the ramshackly table and an old bed. The bedroom is right there, my angel, and you may help me into it, then go for Dr. Bailey. But first tell me your name."

"I am Lilian Jordan, Miss Rhodes' new assistant. I came to bring your bonnet."

Miss Lurintha was trembling with an excitement not wholly the result of her fall.

"Jordan! Jordan! Any relation to the Jordans that used to live on the old Wetherbee place?"

"My father lived in this village when he was a young man, but—"

"His name, child! Tell me his name!"

Miss Lurintha's lips were very white, and her visitor looked at her in some surpise.

"His name was Frank. He is dead now, and my mother too."

"How—did—he—die?" Miss Lurintha's voice was very faint.

"He went to sea after my mother died—when I was a baby. He came home only at long intervals. He was on board the Stella when it went down six years ago."—(Miss Lurintha covered his face with her trembling hands, and a little sob escaped her lips.) "I lived with my mother's sister in Lowell," continued the girl softly, drawing near, and kneeling by Miss Lurintha, with a girl's swift instinct—a feeling that there was a tie between them,—we both worked in the mills there. When my Aunt Susan married and moved to Illinois three months ago, she advised me to come to my father's old home. I only came last week. Aunt Susan thought I would find friends here, and if father ever did come back, he could find me here," tenderly stroking the hand of her who an hour before had been to her a total stranger.

"She—was—right—" said Miss Lurintha, slowly, with a drawn, white face. "Help me to bed, child Jordan, and go for Dr. Bailey."

During the few minutes that she lay alone, in that bare chamber, the arid years rolled away from Miss Lurintha, and she was once more fair and young, and a betrothed wife. But "a little rift" had widened which "by and by made all the music mute." And now the sea had devoured him. And another woman had been the mother of his child. Later, when Lilian and Dr. Bailey came, Miss Lurintha, oblivious of her sufferings, oblivious of the doctor's presence, reaching out her hand, and said, "Child Jordan, you must live with me from this hour. There's no two ways about it. This bed's big enough for two till we can buy another—and I'm your mother in the sight of heaven."

So it came about that Dr. Bailey took a message to little Miss Rhodes on his way home, and she didn't get her bazar till Monday morning. But Miss Lurintha had found her daughter.

On a snowy day some months later, Miss Lurintha (whose injuries had been only temporary) sat by her kitchen window sewing. Lilian still worked for Miss Rhodes and her adopted mother did plain sewing for the neighbors. So they managed to keep the wolf from the door, and had even replaced a few of the Lares and Penates swallowed up by Martha Stebbins' greed. Adoniram had indeed ventured to drive over about Thanksgiving time with a small bag of potatoes for his sister, but kept looking over his shoulder apprehensively, and would not stop long enough to take a cup of tea.

"Stole them out of his own bin, Child Jordan. Actually had to steal his own potatoes to bring his sister a mess!" and Miss Lurintha smiled grimly as she thought that a day of reckoning must come even for Adoniram's wife.

On this particular afternoon she was finishing some blue checked shirts for Henry Littlefield.

"I'll jest step over and ask Mis' Littlefield if she wants the wristbands as wide as the last," said Miss Lurintha, "and if she has any butttermilk to spare, I'll make some biscuit for supper. The child loves them so."

At that very moment "the child" looked up from the box of ribbons she was sorting, as the door of Miss Rhodes' little shop was opened by a grizzly-bearded stranger, who came to ask questions about certain of the old residents. Whether the answer obtained gave satisfaction or not, the concluding paragraphs of this sketch will show.

Miss Lurintha came back from Neighbor Littlefield's with the blue-checked shirt over her arm, and the pitcher of butter-milk in the other hand, to find her adopted child standing in the center of the kitchen, with glowing cheeks and feverish bright eyes.

"Bless me, child, are you sick? How strange you look! And how early you are home!"

"Mother Lurintha," began Lilian, unheeding her questions, "do you know that to-morrow will be Chaistmas?"

"I'm not likely to forget it, but that does not bring you home in the middle of the afternoon, does it? Because if you think that I'm going to give you your Christmas present before the right time comes, young lady, you're wide o' the mark, that's all," said Miss Lurintha, in a tone of pleasant banter.

"Never mind about your Christmas gift to me, Mother Lurintha. I've come home at 3 o'clock to give you my present, because—oh—because it's too big to hide!" and with hysterical laughing and weeping, Lilian threw open the door of the next room and cried:

"Come out, father!"

And a grizzly-bearded stranger strode into the middle of the old kitchen and took Miss Lurintha right into his arms, checked shirt, buttermilk, and all,—and she laid her head on his stalwart shoulder, and cried softly, still helplessly holding her burdens till Lily relieved her.

For the sea had given up its dead and the heart that had clung passionately to Frank Jordan's child, living the past once more, and daily seeing the father's features in the fresh young face, had come to its own at last.

Martha Stebbins had grace enough left in her narrow soul to stay away from the wedding. When rumors reached her that Frank Jordan was a wealthy man, and could surround with comforts and luxuries the woman she had once so shamefully robbed, her bony cheeks grew livid, but her heart beat hot and thick with shame.

Frank Jordan and Lurintha Stebbins Jordan, his wife, stand beside the porch of the old homestead, on a lovely summer night, listening to a fresh girl-voice singing in the house to the accompaniment of a piano.

"It's just 20 years to-night, Lurintha, since we gave each other up and I went off and married in a desperate fit, then followed the sea for years and years, to deaden old thoughts. You've had a hard life, Lurintha, as far as work and worry could make it hard—even at the best of times, you've had a hard life—but I'll make it easy for you now, as far as money and love can make it easy."

He stroked back the thin strands of hair from her temples, and looked into her eyes with an honest affection and devotion of the long ago.

"Put love first, Frank," says Mrs. Lurintha, softly, "for the money wouldn't be nothing but dry leaves without it."

And the moonbeams fall like silver, while the fresh girl-voice sings out into the summer night:

For I know I shall see thee and love thee again,
When the sea gives up its dead.

DECORATING A CHURCH ALTAR.

Palms and other plants are usually used in the Christmas decoration of the church; but a much finer effect can be secured by grouping these at points away from the altar, and decorating that with vines or evergreens. If holly is procurable, it can be massed about the altar, and arranged along the chancel-rail in a carelessly artistic way, and be made much more effective than any potted plants, as the latter always have a more or less formal air about them in spite of all efforts to avoid it. If you have tall palms, place them in the background. If both holly or evergreens and flowering plants are used, do not combine them, but keep the flowers to one side. The two do not harmonize. One "kills" the other, to make use of the term which artists use to express inharmonious combinations of colors. In this case, it is not so much a clash of color as it is of individuality. Holly berries and leaves require nothing in the shape of flowers to bring out their beauty, but show to the best advantage by themselves, or when used with evergreens. In wreathing the chancel-rails, fasten the sprays to a rope or cord with fine wire or string, and do not attempt any regularity in size or shape of festoons when you come to put the wreathing in place. Aim to produce an unstudied effect.

A charming effect is produced by sprinkling the leaves of holly or evergreen with mucilage and then sifting powdered mica over them. This will glisten in the evening like frost. If the supply of holly berries is limited, crystallized grasses can be worked in effectively. There are varieties of shrubs growing in swampy places which bear scarlet fruit, which makes a very satisfactory substitute for the holly. If holly leaves are not procurable, go to the florist, or some person having a private greenhouse or conservatory, and borrow an old plant of English ivy. Throw the vines over the altar, letting the ends of the branches trail on the floor at sides and in front. Among the dark green foliage—which should be washed before using to bring out its glossy beauty—fasten the berries gathered in the swamp, and use grasses among them, if you choose. Some of the berries can be dipped in mucilage and dusted with mica, and combined with the scarlet clusters. The frosty white and glowing scarlet harmonize well and contrast strongly, and heighten the effect of each other. The rich green of the ivy will throw out the colors most effectively. In some respects I prefer the ivy to holly, as its long branches are much easier to arrange satisfactorily. Simply throw them over the altar and they seem to almost arrange themselves. A pure white cross can be placed on the altar with sprays of ivy winding about it and trailing over its arms. If thought preferable, a cross or star made entirely of berries, either in their natural color or frosted, can be placed in front of the altar, against a background of ivy or evergreens. In this case I would not use clusters of berries at other points of the altar decoration, but confine the effect to the designs into which they are worked.—Eden E. Rexford, in Ladies' Home Journal.

A Rough Estimate—Miss Sears—"What should you imagine her age to be?" Miss Knox—"I'm not very good at a guess; possibly the carboniferous."—Vogue.

HE FELT ACQUAINTED.

He was going out alone in the darkness that lies between this world and the next; the little fellow was afraid and clung to his father's hand and complained in a feeble voice that was full of pain:

"I don't want to die, papa. It will be so lonesome in heaven; there isn't anybody I know there."

Then his father soothed him fondly and told him of dear ones who were there and would be sure to welcome their little friend.

"They are grown-up angels, papa They won't know me at all."

The father reminded the sick child of a little playmate who had died the year before.

"Did Jean go to heaven, papa? He will know me, won't he, when he sees me coming? And maybe they'll send him to meet me, and we can play together."

"Are you afraid now, Artie."

"No, papa. It's all right. I don't mind going to heaven if Jean's there It kind of makes me feel acquainted."

And with a pitiful smile he went away to find Jean.—Troy Budget.

The lady had given the small boy an apple and he had said nothing in recognition. "What does a little boy say when he gets anything?" asked the lady insinuatingly. He hesitated a moment. "Some little boys," he said, "says 'thank you'; some says 'much obliged,' and some just keeps thinkin' how much better an orange is than an apple."—Detroit Free Press.

INSURANCE!

We wish to call attention of the people of Monson and vicinity to our superior facilities for writing their insurance, either

Life, Fire or Accident!

If you seek protection, you want to get protection. We represent none but time-tried and fire-tested companies, the oldest and the best.

See our list: Ætna, Hartford, Phœnix, Continental and National of Hartford; Home, Niagara, Phœnix, Continental and American of New York; Insurance Co. of North America and Pennsylvania Fire of Philadelphia; Springfield Fire and Marine of Springfield; Guardian of London and Royal of Liverpool. In combined capital and assets we are the largest agency in Western Mass. Last year we wrote over $1,000,000 fire insurance, and during the past four years we have paid the people of Monson over $125,000, and all losses have been adjusted promptly and equitably.

We are authorized agents for all of our companies, write our own policies, and can bind your insurance at any moment. We can secure a policy in any Life Insurance Co. you may wish—but make a specialty of the Connecticut Mutual of Hartford, because we believe that they give the best contract.

For Accident Insurance we can give you the Traveller's of Hartford, and they need no commendation.

Respectfully,

MORRIS & FARRINGTON, Monson.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

ILLUSTRATED.

HARPER'S WEEKLY is beyond all question the leading journal in America, in its splendid illustration, in its corps of distinguished contributors, and in its vast army of readers. In special lines, it draws on the highest order of talent, the men best fitted by position and training to treat the leading topics of the day. In fiction, the most popular story-writers contribute to its columns. Superb drawings by the foremost artists illustrate its special articles, its stories, and every notable event of public interest; it contains portraits of the distinguished men and women who are making the history of the time, while special attention is given to the Army and Navy, Amateur Sport, and Music and the Drama, by distinguished experts. In a word, HARPER'S WEEKLY combines the news features of the daily paper and the artistic and literary qualities of the magazine with the solid critical character of the review.

AYER'S

Sarsaparilla

Is superior to all other preparations claiming to be blood purifiers. First of all, because the principal ingredient used in it is the extract of genuine HONDURAS sarsaparilla root, the variety richest in medicinal properties. Also, because the yellow dock, being raised expressly for the Company, is always fresh and of the very best kind. With equal discrimination and care each of the other ingredients are selected and compounded. It is

Santa Claus.

The world outside was mantled through,
Level lay the snow and deep;
With high hopes for the to-morrow
Had the children gone to sleep.

Burned the night lamp dull and dimly,
Late before the fire I drowsed,
When something tumbling down the "chimley"
Me from dreaming sharp aroused.

Was it man, or worse, or woman
That thus down upon me bore?
Till my pluck I had to summon
Ere I scanned the scarecrow o'er.

Clad in bearskin and in beaver,
Bearded like a billy goat:—
Although in ghosts I'm no believer,
Sore upon my heart it smote.

Though no word was lisped or spoken,
And of greeting not a sign,
Yet I took the beard for token
That the sex was masculine.

Broad his hands, and brown as autumn's
Leaves that wither in the fall;
His pantaloons, tied at the bottoms,
Bulged out like his pockets all.

Thought I,—This is some impostor
Come to fright the "Johnny Raws;"
Till (having said a pater noster,)
Flashed upon me—Santa Claus!

Smiled he then upon me grimly,
Like some solemn sage of yore;
Burned the night lamp dull and dimly,
Dimmer than it burned before.

Then with rapid gait and rocking
Moved he softly as a mouse,
Dropping something in each stocking
That was hung up in the house.

Chivalry I'd now to summon,
Knew 'twas I that awkward was,
For with all the grace of woman
Shone the shaggy Santa Claus.

He, whene'er his call was finished,
Looked as lovely as the dawn,
To my darling's form diminished
Smiled a "Good night," and was gone.

What had seemed coarsest of creatures
A brief visit came to pay,
Wore a woman's winsome features,
As an angel passed away;

Vanished, winged-like and lightly,
Up the chimney dark no more;
And the night lamp burning brightly
Seemed with silver burnished o'er.

Yet precocious children, smiling,
As each one a present draws,
Say 'tis just big folks beguiling,
That there is no "Sandy Claws."

INASMUCH: A CHRISTMAS STORY.

What was Christmas to Miss Venner? Simply the twenty-fifth of December, a day to be observed as custom decreed by the church-going and gift-giving. She heard the pealing of Christmas bells, listening to the Gloria in Excelsis, but neither joy-bells nor anthem was in her heart or on her lips; she gave gifts, but they were of the hand and purse, and were received in a matter-of-course manner which made her wonder if there was such a thing as real gratitude in the world. She tried to do her duty to the utmost on that day, even inviting the next of kin—mostly second and third cousins—to dinner, listening with calm indifference outwardly, tho' with supreme inward contempt to their flattering speeches, not even wincing when volatile Fanny would exclaim: "What lovely china! remember me in your will, Cousin Alicia." Or when Cousin Henry would say: "I quite envy you that buffet—you must leave that to me." Although the fact of their constantly reminding her that she was not immortal, and so often refreshing her memory as to their liking of certain of her possessions, made her resolve to endow some charitable institution when she made her will. "Perhaps a home for disappointed old maids," she would say bitterly. Not that she was very old—thirty-six her next birthday—but she was so pale and grave, and banded her abundant brown hair in such a prim, old-maidish fashion, and had an habitual frown on her forehead that gave a hard look to her otherwise handsome brown eyes and made her seem far older than she was.

Years ago Christmastide had its joys for her; when she was the happy young girl, Alicia, and before that as the child Alice, when father and mother love made every day sunny and joyous. As Alicia, there was handsome David Carruth who had eyes and ears for her alone, and with whom she used to exchange Christmas gifts from young girlhood to young womanhood. Now, as stately Miss Venner, she had nobody—nobody.

Alicia Venner's great trouble was when her mother died; her next, when her father brought widow Marvyn home to take her mother's place; then there was Helen Marvyn—a step-mother was enough, it seemed to her, without a step-sister. The second Mrs. Venner was neither better nor worse than step-mothers in general; but Alicia could never please her, and finally ceased to try. And Helen, from being constantly held before her as being a paragon in all respects, became obnoxious. But what mattered it—had not she David? and were not they all in all to each other? They were not affianced; he had not said, "I love you," in so many words—but in looks, in tones, in a quiet air of proprietorship he had said so many, many times; and she, dreaming as young girls will, never pictured a future in which he was not a prominent figure.

How well she could remember a bright night of years ago, a night when the moon laid white fingers on the lips of nature, and hushed her breathings into profound silence; when the white rose vied with each other in fragrant offerings. David picked her a rose, she remembered—they had been for a long walk, a walk during which they were both strangely silent—the silence born of perfect content. As they neared the house he said:

"Alicia, there is much I meant to have said to-night; but somehow I have been too happy to talk."

She remembered now how he drew her unresisting form to his side, saying:

"Alicia, do you love me; will you—" then the sound of an opening door, and a sharp voice calling, "Alicia! Alicia! come right in out of the night air," broke the spell and brought them back to reality. David hastily kissed her. "I will write to-morrow," he said, "all that I would have said to-night; and do not keep me in suspense for an answer, will you, dear?"

That sentence rang in her ears for years after, and seemed to her to have been prompted by some mocking fiend of faithfulness.

"One would suppose that you were old enough to know better than to be standing around on the damp grass a whole evening; Helen went to bed two hours ago," said Mrs. Venner, with acerbity, drawing comparisons, as usual. That David Carruth, the richest and most eligible young man in the vicinity, should prefer Alicia to the faultless Helen was a source of constant mortification to Mrs. Venner.

Alicia went straight to her room, making no reply—she was too happy to quarrel. "To-morrow"—what would he write, and what should she say? She knew well enough, and wisbfully framed a reply in her mind. She was up betimes in the morning, out on the dewy lawn, lingering over the rose bushes, as if they had caught the secret of the unfinished sentence, and might be caressed into parting with it. Morning gave place to noon, noon to night; but no letter. She watched and listened the long evening, and went to bed heavy-hearted, but hopeful. "To-morrow, perhaps," she thought, as she longed and waited for time to pass. She had not learned that—

"Too soon, too soon,
The noon will be the afternoon,
Too soon to-day be yesterday."

"To-morrow" came—but no letter—the third day she was heavy-eyed and heavy-hearted, and when the village gossip ran in for a friendly call, Alicia listened apathetically to her wearisome talk—not taking the trouble to defend this and that one, as she often did, from the attacks of her slanderous tongue.

"Mrs. Judge Barker has got a new black henrietta cloth almost covered with crape—suppose she thinks folk'll measure her sorrow by her weeds," ran on the gossip.

"Most likely," asserted Mrs. Venner.

"Then there's that girl who lives at the Marvin's—folks do say she isn't any better than she should be. And David Carruth, he's gone off to California all of a sudden. Hoity toity! what's the matter?" and she turned her beady black eyes keenly upon Alicia, who paled, and would have been overcome by her momentary faintness and fallen, but for a friendly chair-back.

While the gossip inwardly commented, "Straws tell which way the wind blows; I reckoned I'd find out if Alicia knew that he was going."

But Alicia regained her self-possession, and so skillfully parried the gossip's questions that with all her shrewdness she was not quite certain whether she did or did not know that David was so soon to leave. Once in the solitude of her room, Alicia thought over the strange departure with much heartache and many misgivings, though she did not really doubt her lover. With true womanly faith and trust she watched and waited through the long wearisome days that followed for tidings of him; none came, but the village folks commented much upon his absence, some ascribing one reason, some another. It was finally settled that he had received a telegram from his guardian—some urgent matter of business probably; then it was reported that he had decided to remain in California; the last rumor being confirmed by the remal of the Carruth place for a term of years; and after a little the "nine days wonder" was over, and David Carruth forgotton, or only spoken of as connected with Alicia Venner's "disappointment."

As he passed out of Alicia's life, sorrow and trouble came to fill it—her father's sudden death, her step-mother's lingering illness which was fatally terminated by the paragon Helen's elopement with a ne'er do well. All this left Alicia little time for idle repining; then pride came to her rescue—should she, a Venner, publish to the world that she had been slighted, scorned, trifled with! She, instead, studied to repress all natural feeling to become matter-of-fact, practical, and devoted herself to business. Her study was not without effect; for she grew cold and stately, and came to be called Miss Venner. Not that the ossification that changed the impulsive young girl, Alicia, to the calm dignified Miss Venner, was easily accomplished; instead, it was a process of daily, hourly pain. Neither was the result, when achieved, entirely satisfactory — but it deceived the world, which said, "Miss Venner got over David Carruth's going off quickly enough; she hasn't much heart anyway."

The years passed by uneventfully, bringing tidings of David to Miss Venner but once when rumor said he was married to a California heiress—the re-rental of the Carruth place for a number of years made it an accepted fact that he had no intentions of returning to his native village for some time at least. So the only change the passing years brought to Miss Venner was that of growing older and statelier; yes, and richer; everything she touched was with a Midas hand; her mill property had trebled in value—her investments were wisely made—but what cared she? She gave, indeed, liberally to the poor; but her gifts were of the hand, and unaccompanied by smiles, kind words, or womanly sympathy.

Christmas came and went all these uneventful years, a dull, joyless season to her—for in the contemplation of her own misery she lost sight of the happiness of the world; and only vaguely recalled the blessed fact that our Saviour was born on that day. Yet there had been a time when she sang Christmas carols, and read the sweet old story of Bethlehem in judea with tearful eyes and thrilled heart. When the simplest thing, a gift of roses; a "Merry Christmas," or the quick tender glances of dark eyes, filled the whole day with joy. Now it was nearing another, at least it was near enough to talk of—and Miss Venner had already subscribed generously to various impending church festivities. By and by, when the day came, she would give to all the cousins—money, probably—she was too indifferent toward them to select articles suitable for each, and she did not care to embroider slippers, cushions and watchcases; she had no loving thoughts and happy fancies to imprison with silks and wools, and make the labor one of love, a cheerful pastime.

There were times when this lonely woman realized how far apart she was from others, and felt that the distance was of her own making, when conscience reproached her for her apathy and selfishness. One such day she sat reading her morning lesson (she read her Bible daily in a dutiful, mechanical fashion), she read on carelessly until the sentence, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me," arrested her attention. It seemed a reproachful finger pointed at her; a still, small voice, saying: "You have not taken in the stranger, or visited the sick and in prison." "I have given of my substance," she thought: "but not of your heart, not of kind words," said the still small voice. "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not unto me;" and Miss Venner with the solemn, chiding sentence ringing in her ears, closed the Bible and uneasily paced the room until a servant informed her that the carriage waited at the door; for it was her custom to ride every day, no matter how inclement the weather.

It was a bleak morning; the wind blew in fitful gusts, driving before it little flocks of sad-faced, withered leaves, drifting them here and there, even into the carriage, where they lay a shivering handful.

"Poor things!" thought Miss Venner; "yet they have had their day—their tender, green babyhood, their bright youth, their splendid prime, when they were right royal in crimson and gold; now comes sunset, old age to them and to me." Then Miss Venner, watching a mad whirl of them, spied a little figure crouching by the wayside and crying bitterly. A boy of perhaps five or six years, clothed in a worn grey suit that had been neatly patched, but from which the patches were becoming ripped and were the sport of the wind; faded, well-darned red stockings, a pair of shabby shoes out at the toes, and a tattered straw hat completed his attire; and thus insufficiently clad, he crouched close to the old stone wall, as if seeking for the warmth and comfort that by some mischance had been denied him by the world. Dead stalks of golden-rod, tall mullens, and bunches of milkweed that had lately given up their silken freight, surrounded him, and with every gust of wind swayed toward him, as if they were moved with pity for his forlorn condition, and longed to extend the comfort humanity seemed to withold.

Miss Venner signalled the coachman to stop. "Go ask the child what is the matter," she said. He obeyed; but the child made no reply, and only sobbed more, seeming frightened. Finally Miss Venner left the carriage, daintily picked her way through the reeds and over the stones, and approached the little waif.

"Why are you here, and why do you cry?" she asked.

"I'm tryin' to die; and I'm cryin' 'cause I'm awful cold and hungry. Are you after me," and the child looked at her with tears in his great blue eyes.

"After you! No. What do you want to die for, where do you live, where's your papa and mamma?"

"I don't live nowhere; papa and mamma's in the ground, and I want to die 'cause people 'o tryin' to put me in the 'sylum—oh, oh!" and the child rocked back and forth in an agony of grief.

"In what asylum!"

"Don't know—just the 'sylum."

"Haven't you any brother or sister?"

"Haint got nobody;" he sobbed.

"Like myself," thought Miss Venner; then she patted him on the shoulder, and took out her handkerchief and wiped his tear-stained face. "Will you come home with me and get warm and have something to eat?"

"You won't put me in then, will you?" said the child, looking up in a half-trustful, half-pleading manner.

"No, no—bring the blankets and wrap the little fellow in them," said Miss Venner to the coachman, and then took her seat in the carriage.

"I suppose I shall take him up here ma'am?" Miss Venner glanced at the child and thought a moment—he was ragged and dusty—but, "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these," said the still, small voice.

"Put him beside me; it is warmer here," she replied shortly.

The motion of the carriage and the child's fatigue soon caused him to fall asleep, and Miss Venner carefully drew the robes around him, and as she felt the pressure of his head on her arm, and looked down on the tattered hat with the bright hair gleaming through its rents, a sensation of self-forgetfulness and of actual interest in the little stranger took possession of her. The child awakened when the carriage stopped, was carefully lifted down and Miss Venner led him up the steps; he paused at the door and pulled back, his fears returning; then looking up in her face with a searching, beseeching glance, said; "this ain't the 'sylum is it?" On being solemnly assured to the contrary, he went in willingly, and Miss Venner hastily summoned Dinah, her chief-of-affairs, to bring him food.

"Lor' massey, honey, ob all de 'sprisin' things!" exclaimed Dinah holding up her hands.

"Yes, Dinah, I suppose it is a queer proceeding for me. I found the little fellow by the wayside—he says his father and mother are dead, so I am going to care for him for the present;" said Miss Venner, half apologetically.

Dinah obeyed her mistress, and Jack—for he said his name was John, but his mamma called him Jack — was soon comfortably placed before the fire with a bowl of bread and milk.

"Now, Dinah, see that the bath-room is very warm, and find me something to put on him in place of these tattered clothes."

"Not so easy, missy; 'spects you dunno what you's talkin' 'bout. Chilluns clothes in dis house? Nothin' but some little bed-gowns up in de ole chist."

"Just bring them down. Now, Jack, you are to be bathed, then you may have more to eat, and go to bed. Do you like to be here?"

"Wouldn't you sooner be here'n out in the cold?"

"Why yes, of course," answered Miss Venner.

"Well then," said Jack, nodding his head with an air of satisfaction, while Miss Venner laughed quietly.

"'Spects I'll tote him in de wash-room now!" said Dinah, after spreading out the time-yellowed garments to air.

The child looked with a half-frightened expression at Dinah's black face, then cast an appealing glance toward Miss Venner.

"Inasmuch," thought she—"No, Dinah, you get everything ready and I will wash him."

"Sho, honey, you nebber washed a chile in de days ob yer life! Spile yer dress an' all yer fixins."

Nevertheless, Miss Venner tucked up her silken gown, pinned back her laces, called for an apron and entered upon her labors. She was rather awkward about her self-imposed task, and there was much splashing and spluttering.

"Are you goin' to put soap on my face? 'Cause if you be, I'll shut my eyes," said Jack.

Miss Venner was fond of art; and pictures of sad-faced Madonnas, aureoled saints, and Raphael's and Murillo's wonderful children hung about her rooms; but here was a living embodiment of art; art in its divinest form. As she washed she grew enthusiastic—bright golden hair, soft, sunny blue eyes; snowy, pink-tinted flesh, graceful curves and dimples; what wonder that of such is the kingdom of heaven, she thought, for strangely enough, her morning lessons for days past had been upon the one theme—our Savior's love of little children.

The washing finished, Jack was arrayed in one of the little old gowns, wrapped in a shawl, and put by the fire to finish his supper. There he rocked quietly for a while, alternately watching the fire and looking up into Miss Venner's face in a wistful fashion; finally he shyly said:

"Please may I sit in your lap. Nobody hain't held me since my mamma died."

Miss Venner consented to hold him, and when he was seated to his satisfaction, he pathetically asked:

"Please, won't you kiss me? Nobody hain't kissed me in a long time."

Stately Miss Venner surprisedly found herself pressing kisses upon the rosy mouth, and holding the little figure close to her heart, while the small arms were folded about her neck; and then and there the case of Miss Venner's ossification commenced.

"Shall I take him up and put him in my bed, honey?" asked Dinah.

"No," answered Miss Venner, shortly, "you may make a little bed for him in my room to-night."

"Lor' massy!" exclaimed Dinah. I reck'on de worl' am comin' to an end."

Miss Venner had something to do and something to think of the next morning. Clothes to provide for her little charge—questions to ask—then a long drive to the distant town from which the child said he came. She found that the father, a clergyman, had been dead nearly two years; the mother, left with small means, had added to them by sewing; but over-work and the care of a sick child, and grief at its death, prostrated her on a bed of sickness from which she never rose. As there were no near relations to care for Jack, and as it was a poor parish where most of the homes were plentiful supplied with children, a committee of ladies acting upon the matter had decided to consign him to an orphan asylum.

Little Jack eagerly welcomed Miss Venner on her return. "Oh, I'm so glad you're comed back," he said, seizing her hand and holding it up to his rosy cheek to warm it; "it's been so lonesome; I looked at all the picture-books, then I watched and watched."

There was an odd little sensation about Miss Venner's heart—it was strange, very strange, to have somebody watching for her and genuinely glad to see her. "How would you like to stay with me all the time and be my little boy?" she questioned.

"Hadn't you'd rather be here'n in the 'sylum?" Here with a nice, pretty lady an' a warm fire an' everythin'?" sagely asked Jack, looking up into her face in a most bewitching manner.

Miss Venner could but assent.

"Well, then," said Jack, as if he thought it answer enough. Then he leaned his curly head confidingly on her shoulder, as he stood beside her chair and gently touched her dress.

The short dark December days had a gleam of sunshine in them now, and Miss Venner no longer idly passed them, and restlessly longed for one to succeed another. How could she be idle with all those questions to answer, or restless with that bright little head pillowed on her heart.

"Dat chile's jest like healin' bam spread all ober an ole hurt," commented shrewd Dinah, who dearly loved her mistress, and knew her sad story.

But if Jack diverted and interested Miss Venner, he was a thorn in the flesh of the next of kin. "She will adopt him. She is demented; she will give him the china; she will make him her heir, and defraud us of our rights!" they chorused. When they questioned her regarding him and her intentions, they found her most reticent, and decided among themselves that he was indeed a thorn, and one not likely to be removed. Indeed, she hardly knew her intentions, save that she meant to keep and care for him. Feeling that there was no one to dispute her claim she did not hasten to arrange the future; although she already found herself looking forward to a time when he, a noble youth, should cheer her declining years. She was wont to picture the future, always seeing herself a lonely old woman whose death was eagerly awaited by those who would profit by it. She calmly faced the fact, and took grim delight in looking among her abundant brown locks for gray hairs; in closely scanning her features for crow's feet and wrinkles. Sometimes, when her search was rewarded, she would sigh a little, as she did one afternoon after consulting her mirror.

"What makes you look in the glass so long —'cause you thinks you's pretty, auntie?" asked Jack, who had been closely watching her.

Miss Venner shook her head sadly. "No, no; I'm getting to be gray and wrinkled, old and ugly."

Jack was indignant. "No such thing," he said stoutly. "You is just lovely, I think."

Miss Venner turned to the window to hide a suspicious moisture gathering in her eyes. It had been a long, long time since she had been "lovely" to anybody. Years ago; how different! Then she sighed deeply.

"Is you lonesome?" asked Jack, gently caressing her head and looking at her with his blue eyes full of pity. "When mamma breaved like that she said t'was cause she was so lonesome after papa;" then he moved a chair to her side and stood looking with her at the wintry landscape. The snow was falling softly in great feathery flakes that came so softly, so silently—heaven-sent messengers, received with eager, outstretched arms by the great trees, whose bare boughs they draped tenderly and pityingly, whispering assurance that there should again be a vigorous flow through her benumbed veins—should again be tender, green leafage, and bird songs in their bereft branches. Miss Venner watched it fall so gently, transforming the bleak and rugged fields into a soft, white expanse, and thought it was God's mantle of charity spread over the sins and sorrows of the world, typical of his mercy. It touched her heart with a soothing influence, and made her feel thankful, for the first time in years, that Christmas was at hand, and that she had it in her power to give gifts. Jack must be bountifully dealt by; and, while she was about it, some other children might be made happy. She would purchase and deliver in person necessaries and delicacies for the infirm old women to whom she usually sent money. Jack was to be left in charge of Dinah, lest he became too wise in Christmas matters; for ask questions he would—questions that would require skillful parrying.

Miss Venner came home at the close of the afternoon tired but happy; feeling that she was rewarded for her trouble by the gratification with which her visits had been received; for, although one woman did say that she would rather have the money than jim-cracks to eat and drink and wear, another told her she was growing young, that she looked as she used when a girl, and, above all, the still small voice was no longer reproachful.

"Did you meet 'm, did you see 'm?" eagerly asked J

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 15, 1893.

THE horse does not seem to be "in it" with the bicycle. The latest record for the wheel was made at Birmingham, Ala., Tuesday, when M. F. Dirnberger of Buffalo, N. Y., made a mile with a flying start, which is the same the horse has, in 1.51. J. P. Bliss of Chicago made a mile from a standing start in 1.54 4-5. Both are world's records.

KANSAS has developed some queer freaks first and last, the latest being Governor Lewelling, who has declared the vagrant law of the state unconstitutional, and instructed the metropolitan police force not to arrest tramps. As a result they are flocking to the state in large numbers and are exceedingly bold, demanding food at private residences, indulging in all sorts of petty depredations, and making the inhabitants uncomfortable generally.

EXTREMELY frigid is the atmosphere when some of the South American countries are not engaged in attempting to annihilate some of their neighbors or in quelling an insurrection at home. Brazil is engaged in the latter, and now Ecuador and Peru are to settle a boundary dispute by force of arms. Ecuador is much the weaker country, but will be assisted by Chili and Bolivia, who have bones of their own to pick with Peru and daren't tackle her alone. Peru also has an internal revolutionary matter to take care of, and is quite likely to find her hands full.

THE government has at last struck a death blow at the illegal bond and investment companies which have been doing a big business all over the country through the mails, by refusing them the use of the mails, and proposing to treat them the same as lottery and other swindlers. The move is one which should have been made long ago. How much capital would have been saved to the people of Massachusetts if the endowment companies had been thus barred out cannot be estimated, but it would have been a very neat sum for these times of little available cash.

JOHN Y. MCKANE, chief of police and supervisor of Gravesend, L. I., who has been on trial for contempt of court in refusing to obey an order directing him to allow citizens to see the registration lists for the last election, and for other equally contemptuous and unlawful acts, gets off too easily. To be sure, he is found guilty and sentenced to imprisonment for 30 days and fined $250, but what will that amount to? The "bhoys" will pay his fine and leave him enough to compensate him handsomely for his incarceration, provided he ever "does time," which is extremely doubtful. The party which controls politics down that way has a faculty of taking care of its friends, no matter what the occasion.

THE advertisers whose generous announcement appear in this issue are earnestly commended to the readers of the JOURNAL. The merchants in the several villages have selected their stocks with care, and holiday gifts of all kinds and at all prices can be had right where you live. And if the local merchant does not happen to have just what you want he will willingly get it for you. Trade at home. There is no need to go to the cities to spend your money. Leave it with the merchants in your own town, they need all the patronage they are likely to get. It will make them feel better toward the community in general, help to keep the money circulating among your own people, and thus assist in making the times better all around.

ANOTHER Anarchist outrage, and a particularly atrocious one, was perpetrated in the Old World Saturday, when a bomb was thrown from the gallery of the French Chamber of Deputies at Paris at a member on the floor. A woman caught the arm of the thrower as he hurled the missile, and it struck the corner of the gallery and exploded. About 100 persons, visitors and deputies, were injured, but none of them fatally. Among the hurt was the thrower, Auguste Vaillant, a well-known Anarchist, with a long criminal record. An ideal anarchist, he, being too lazy to support himself and living by the earnings of the woman with whom he lived, threatening her husband with death when he tried to induce his wife to return to him.

ON the evening of November 1st an explosion occurred in the hold of the steamship City of Alexandria of the New York and Cuba mail line off the coast of Cuba. Six men were killed and the ship set on fire, necessitating running it ashore, where it was destroyed. No cause for the accident could be found, but a new light has been thrown on the matter by the finding at New York last Saturday of a bag of dynamite in a sack of coffee, one of a consignment just received from Cuba, and it is supposed that it was placed there to secure the insurance on the coffee, which was found to be of a much cheaper grade than the invoices called for. It is hard to conceive persons who would deliberately endanger the lives of many of their fellowmen in such a manner, but there are some who have less feeling than the most ferocious of the brute creation.

THE outcome of matters at Honolulu seems to be attracting even more attention just now than the Wilson tariff bill. It was supposed that Minister Blount was sent with instructions to restore the queen to the throne, by force of arms if necessary. But he has reported that matters there are not as he expected to find them, and has asked for instructions as to his course under the existing state of affairs. Meantime all sorts of reports have come from Hawaii. One thing appears to be certain, that the queen, if restored to the throne, cannot hold it without the assistance of the United States, which is not likely to be given. The provisional government will not abdicate without resistance, and the prospects for a revolution are good. More news is expected from there to-morrow or Monday, and is anxiously looked for. The president is severely criticised for his course in keeping the correspondence relative to the Hawaiian affairs and the instructions to Mr. Blount from the public, and has made many enemies in his own party. There is no reason why the people of the country should not know what they, by their representatives, are doing. No business enterprise was ever run in this way.

WITH the advent of cold weather, after the long idleness of the manufacturing interests in all parts of the country, come reports of suffering and want among the poorer class of people in every section. These had nothing laid by, or if they had it melted away during the time of no work, and they now have nothing with which to buy even the necessaries of life. In the large cities there is much complaint, and in many places public meetings have been called to provide some help for the unfortunate. Work on public improvements is being done at some places, the work thus furnished being of great help to the needy. Not nearly enough can be done in this way, however, to relieve all cases, and the moneyed philanthropist who really wishes to do good will have abundant opportunity before warm weather comes again. At Boston Wednesday a circular to landlords was issued by the association for municipal employment of the unemployed, in which it is stated that 50,000 persons in the city are out of employment, and dependent upon them at least 50,000 more. Many have been long out of work and are in arrears for rent, while others have paid their last cent for rent and have no work in sight, and the landlords are asked "In the name of humanity and of the country, which must not degrade and pauperize its working classes too far, if it hopes to stand," to require no more rent from the unemployed until they obtain regular employment.

PALMER NEWS.

The Postal Telegraph to Establish an Office.

It has finally been decided to open an office of the Postal Telegraph in this place as soon as the wires can be strung from here to South Monson, a distance of about six miles. The wires will be run on the poles of the Palmer and Monson Electric Company, and the office will be in the room occupied by the electric company in Strong's block on Main street. The wire arrived Wednesday, and the work of stringing it will be commenced at once, in the hope of having the office open for business a week from to-morrow night. At South Monson the main line from New York to Boston will be tapped, giving customers quick service. The location of the office on Main street will be greatly appreciated by business men, as it will be much nearer and more convenient than the present office of the Western Union at the railroad station.

Otis B. Hill has recovered sufficiently from his recent illness to go to Anthony, R. I., where he intends to spend some time with his brother.

A great many people are wondering why there is not a more general movement among the merchants in the direction of displaying their Christmas goods.

John Wilson has a handsome camp chair which he is to give to the person who purchases fifty cents worth of goods at his store and is fortunate enough to guess the number marked on the prize.

Rev. Mr. Weeks of the Baptist church will preach next Sunday morning on "The Certainty of Christ's Advent." The Wednesday evening meetings are very interesting, as Mr. Weeks is giving a series of expository addresses on the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew.

The temperance meeting on Monday evening in Union church was well attended. The addresses given by the clergymen of the surrounding villages were very enthusiastic, and afforded great encouragement to the friends of temperance in this place. The committee appointed here is composed of Messrs. Lavene, Cheney, Hillman, Provost and Calkins.

A movement is under consideration towards organizing a skating club this winter. A number of subscriptions have been received by Mr. Barnard, and much interest centers in the proposed scheme. The plan is to have an electric light placed on the river, and also have a large space of ice kept in good order for skaters, but it is understood if the measure succeeds that one of the conditions of patronage will be abstinence from the pastime on Sabbath days.

THORNDIKE.

The idea of organizing a dancing class has been abandoned for the present.

Mrs. William Griffith has moved into E. F. Hale's building on Commercial street.

Miss Nellie Murphy has been confined to her home the past week with a severe cold.

The buildings which were recently moved to the Packard place are fast being converted into tenements.

A number from this place will go to Palmer this evening to see "Uncle Hiram" at the opera house.

Mrs. A. Smith of Evanstown is soon to give an illustrated lecture on the subject of "Woman's Rights."

Annie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Longtine, who was quite sick, has recovered and is about again.

The Foresters are sparing neither time nor money to make their coming concert and ball a grand success.

Vitkin Bros., who have occupied John Riley's store on School street, have vacated the same during the past week.

It is reported that many in the village are having a slight touch of the grippe, but no serious cases are reported as yet.

Several from this place are contemplating applying for membership in the Order of United Workmen at Three Rivers.

Mrs. Baccus, a former resident of this place, now of Windsor, Ct., was in town renewing acquaintances on Wednesday.

According to reports many of the young people are preparing new costumes for the Foresters' concert and ball January 2.

Many have been enjoying themselves skating during the week, the cold weather of the past few days having made very fair skating.

E. G. Murdock, the groceryman, has been obliged to add a full line of boots and shoes in order to meet the demands of his increasing trade.

Mrs. Beltone met with a severe accident one day this week, falling on the ice and spraining her right arm and injuring her back quite badly.

A party of young people called on Miss Emma Thompson on Wednesday evening and gave her a pleasant surprise, besides presenting an easy chair and table. The party was entertained in a very enjoyable manner by the recipient. Dancing, singing and refreshments were in order.

A rally in the interests of no license will be held in the Congregational church next Monday evening at 7.30, and the financial, moral and christian phases of the question will be brought out There will be instrumental music to accompany the singing. This move is conducted by the clergymen of the town, and all interested in the best interests of the town are invited to attend.

Mrs. Mary Dowd, a resident of this place for 40 years, died at her home on Church street Monday after an illness of several weeks. The funeral took place from St. Mary's Catholic church on Wednesday at 9 a. m , where a high requiem mass was celebrated by the pastor, Rev. F. J. Lynch. The interment took place in the cemetery on the hill. A daughter and two brothers survive her.

The service of forty hours devotion will take place in the Catholic church next Sunday, after the 10.30 service. This service continues for forty hours in memory of the time during which the body of the Lord remained in the sepulchre. It was begun at Milan in the year 1534, and owes its origin to Father Joseph, a Capuchin friar of Milan. In the year 1534 the city was suffering all the miseries attendant on war, and was reduced almost to despair, when Father Joseph called upon the citizens to raise their eyes from the miseries around them and look up to heaven for relief, assuring them on the part of God that if they would give themselves to fervent prayer for forty hours their city and their country would be liberated from the devastations of the enemy. The citizens obeyed the call, the forty hours prayer continued in the cathedral, and was taken up by all the other churches of the city in rotation. The people meanwhile attended with fervor, and in a short time the emperor and the king of France were seen at the gate of Milan arranging the articles of peace.

The coal still burns in the ruins of the Central Block fire, giving an excellent opportunity for those who stroll up and down the streets to warm themselves. It is sad to see so much fuel going to waste and so many poor people in want.

A serious accident occurred to Edward Dalton Monday while driving from Palmer to Monson. He received a severe scalp wound, and was attended by Dr. Jackson. The accident was caused by the horse being frightened by a passing train.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Congregational church held its regular business meeting last Sunday, and six new members were elected. The meetings this fall are of unusual interest, and the attendance is very large, ranging as high as 130.

The Sunday school of the Methodist church has chosen these officers for the coming year: Superintendant, Frank A. King; assistant superintendent, Prof. A. N. Burke; secretary and treasurer, W. F. Holloway; assistant secretary, H.W.Shaw; librarian, Miss Alice Morris. The school is in grand shape for a big year's work.

The Palmer and Monson Electric Co. feels very much pleased at the manner in which the people here have patronized their light. They now have over 900 lights in the houses and stores, and over 100 more ordered. This is indeed a good showing. Monson people always do the correct thing to help a business along when it is managed on business principles.

Rev. William H. Marble of the Methodist church preached last Sunday the first of a series of five sermons on the doctrine and experience of Bible Holiness. The first, "Holiness, What Is it?" second, "Conversion and Holiness;" third, "Bible Objections to Holiness Examined;" fourth, "Candid Objections to Holiness Answered;" fifth, "Ethical or Practical Holiness in Life."

Patrick Hart, a boy living on the Green, broke through the ice on Reynolds's pond Monday and narrowly escaped drowning. He was rescued with difficulty by two young men employed at the new mill. Edwin Bradway, clerk for Rogers & Co., running to the rescue of young Hart, took a ladder from R. M. Reynolds's barn, and springing upon the ice broke through, but by the aid of the ladder pulled himself out.

The union prayer meeting held Tuesday evening, which was the last of the term, was of unusual interest and had the largest attendance of any meeting this year.—Various changes in studies will be made for the winter term, among them being Greek history for plane geometry; advanced algebra to take the place of beginners in geometry; astronomy to take the place of physiology; solid geometry, which has not hitherto appeared in the catalogue, but owing to the fact that the leading schools of technology require it for admission, and as the academy fits students for any or all of the leading colleges, this study will be offered to all wishing to fit for technical schools.—Profiting by an item which appeared in one of the columns of this paper, denouncing swearing and slang, the young men at Hammond Hall have organized a society known as the Anti-Slang Society. Horace W. Christy, '96, was the founder, and to him much of its success is due. The members of the society, which number eleven, wear a badge of blue ribbon with the letters A. S. S. on it. A fine of one cent is imposed on each person who uses any slang word or phrase, or swears. Already a change in the conversation of the members is noticeable.

BRIMFIELD.

The Inquest on the Cook Fire.

The inquest as to the origin of the fire which burned the buildings of F. E. Cook on the night of November 29, was held before Judge Robinson of the district court at Palmer last Friday and Monday. A number of witnesses were examined. The witness who saw the fire first stated that he saw it from a distance, but that it flashed up suddenly, and so brightly as to illumine all the buildings, the fire starting at the corner of the barn nearest the house. Mr. Cook testified that there had been no fire in or near the building as far as he was concerned. On a stone in the ground near the corner of the building where the fire started were found stains which were suspiciously like kerosene oil. That the fire was of incendiary origin there is not the slightest doubt, and Brimfield people are inclined to lay it to George Starkey, now serving a sentence of two months for drunkenness. The inquest has been adjourned and the evidence submitted to District Attorney Gardner, who will examine the evidence and decide what further action to take in the matter.

BELCHERTOWN.

Charles Hunter is very ill.

J. M. B. Caruthers of New York has been in town for some days.

A Supreme Court Decision.

At a session of the supreme court in Springfield last Saturday Justice Knowlton gave a hearing in the case of Nancy M. Flagg against Charles E. Smith and another, in which this decree was passed: On February 15, 1854, William E. Brewer made a mortgage deed of certain real estate in Wilbraham in said county to Nancy B. S. Rice, which mortgage deed is recorded in the registry of deeds for said Hampden county in book 171 on page 215 and the time, limited in said mortgage for the full performance of the conditions thereof expired on the first day of March, 1858. On the 19th day of September, 1854, the said William E. Brewer made another mortgage deed of the same real estate to Timothy Brewer, which mortgage deed is recorded in said registry of deeds in book 173 on page 415, and which was given to secure the payment of certain promissory notes, dated respectively April 17, 1854, and June 27, 1854, and each payable on demand. The said William E. Brewer and those having his estate in said real estate have been in interrupted posession of said real estate for more than 20 years after the expiration of the time limited in said mortgages for the full performance of the conditions thereof, and until the date of the filing of said petition. No evidence has been offered of any payment on account of the debts secured by said mortgages or either of them within 20 years after the expiration of the time limited in said mortgage for the full performance of the conditions thereof, or within 20 years prior to the date of the filing of said petition or of any other act within said time in recognition of the existence of either of said mortgages as valid mortgages.

The Warren debating club met at the library Wednesday night and reorganized with the following officers: President, George DeLaval; vice-president, George P. Aborn; secretary, Fred F. Cook; treasurer, H. S. Hamlet; executive committee, Daniel G. Hitchcock, George DeLaval and Rev. Harris G. Hale.

A pleasant reunion of the World's Fair visitors was held at the hotel last Friday evening, 103 guests being present. A bountiful supper was served by the landlord, and a pleasant evening spent in the parlors. Superintendent of Schools Brodeur acted as toastmaster, and among the speakers were C. D. Keyes, Dr. J. Cutter, Editor D. G. Hitchcock, Dr. J. W. Hasting, George De Laval, Prof. W. L. Weeks, H. P. Bliss, Dr. Phelps, Mrs. D. H. Hitchcock and Miss M. S. Hitchcock and Mrs. Phelps read essays, and Henry S. Howe presented 20 interesting views of the fair from a stereopticon. It was voted to hold another gathering later in the winter.

J. M. Drake's Store Burglarized.—One of the Men Caught at Palmer.

The dry goods store of John M. Drake was entered by burglars Tuesday night, an entrance being effected by breaking out a pane of glass in the front window, the thieves then crawling through the hole. The glass was evidently broken with two iron bolts about 18 inches long, as these were found in the store Wednesday morning, the burglars evidently intending to use them as weapons if surprised. Three overcoats, a quantity of underclothing, stockings, gloves, jewelry, cutlery and other small wares were taken, in value about $100. The cast-off underclothing of one of the fellows was found in a freight car. Yesterday morning one of the fellows, the one who belonged to the underclothing in the car, was found at Palmer. A vagrant who had been arrested the night before declined to break stone in payment for his night's entertainment and breakfast, as the town requires, and was brought before the court. When the officer came to examine him it was discovered that both the woolen shirts he had on were new, as were also his stockings, cap and overcoat. He said he bought the whole outfit for $3, but the story was too thin. The fellow was searched, and sewed into the waistband of his pants were found a lot of the knives, rings, pins, etc., stolen from Mr. Drake, while Mr. Drake's private mark was found on the shirts. The fellow is about 22, says his name is Michael Lee, and gives South Boston as his home.

WARE.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

All Around the Year 1894.

Design in color by J. Pauline Sunter. Printed on heavy cardboard, gilt edges, with chain, tassels and ring. Size 4¼ by 5½ inches. Boxed. Price 50 cents. Special terms by the dozen.

"A delightful tale in its mixture of love and childhood, birds and flowers. The dear, dainty little figures, decked in smiling gowns, and with curiously expressive faces, turning the leaves of the year for us with childhood's mixture of nonchalance and seriousness. They are quaint little figures and very tasteful combinations, and no one but will find a special charm in finding the dates on such an attractive calendar; and so we finish our first look at one of the prettiest attractions of the season." Lee & Shepard, publishers, Boston.

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used by millions of mothers for their children while teething. If disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the pain of cutting teeth send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures diarrhœa, regulates the stomache and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums and reduces inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Sold by all druggists throughout the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup." 52-9

People who have tried it, say there is no better medicine for dyspepsia than Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It may not give one the stomach of an ostrich, but it so strengthens the alimentary organs that digestion of ordinary food becomes easy and natural.

Feeble and capricious appetites are best regulated by the use of Ayer's Cathartic Pills. They do not debilitate, by excessive stimulation; but cause the stomach, liver and bowels to perform their functions properly. As an after-dinner pill they are unequaled.

What Five $1 Bills Accomplished.

This money was invested in five bottles of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. "I suffered for nearly ten years with constipation, jaundice and biliousness," writes Mr. D. Probert, of New Hampton, N. Y., "and the best medical treatment I could procure did me no good. A friend of mine spoke about Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, which I bought, and when I had taken three bottles I was what most people would call a well man, and two bottles more entirely cured me. What the doctors cost me hundreds of dollars in trying to do, Favorite Remedy did for five dollars." If you are inclined to constipation don't neglect yourself. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy permanently cures it. 37

BREAKFAST—SUPPER.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided for breakfast and supper a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We can escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette. Made simply with boiling water or milk. ## MYSTERIES!

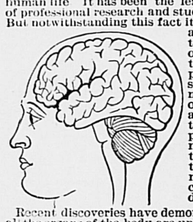
The Nervous System the Seat of Life and Mind. Recent Wonderful Discoveries.

No mystery has ever compared with that of human life. It has been the leading subject of professional research and study in all ages. But notwithstanding this fact it is not generally known that the seat of life is located in the upper part of the spinal cord, near the base of the brain, and so sensitive is this portion of the nervous system that even the prick of a needle will cause instant death.



Recent discoveries have demonstrated that all the organs of the body are under the control of the nerve centers, located in or near the base of the brain, and that when these are deranged the organs which they supply with nerve fluid are also deranged. When it is remembered that a serious injury to the spinal cord will cause paralysis of the body below the injured point, because the nerve force is prevented by the injury from reaching the paralyzed portion, it will be understood how the derangement of the nerve centers will cause the derangement of the various organs which they supply with nerve force.

Two-thirds of chronic diseases are due to the imperfect action of the nerve centers at the base of the brain, not from a derangement primarily originating in the organ itself. The great mistake of physicians in treating these diseases is that they treat the organ rather than the nerve centers which are the cause of the trouble.

DR. FRANKLIN MILES, the celebrated specialist, has profoundly studied this subject for over 20 years, and has made many important discoveries in connection with it, chief among them being the facts contained in the above statement, and that the ordinary methods of treatment are wrong. All headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion, pressure, blues, mania, melancholy, insanity, epilepsy, St. Vitus dance, etc., are nervous diseases no matter how caused. The wonderful success of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is due to the fact that it is based on the foregoing principle.

DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

Sympathy.

If I could tell you dear—could find some way
To speak, that you might know how deep and true
My love has been. If I could only say
Something that might perhaps be sweet to you!

If I had known such pain as hurts you so.
Why, I could come with heart athrob, to-day,
With bitter pain and grief—like yours, you know,
And kneel beside you, dear—yet I would say

No word. Ah! no, my, dear, but you would know
Somehow, I think, that all your tears and pain
Another heart had learned long, long ago,
And yet lived on, and waked the earth again.

The silence chills me—why, the very sea
Lies still beneath the mist's gray velvet shroud,
And all the sweet old world that used to be
Grows dim and wet with tears of dew and cloud.

And I am silent, dear. But, oh! to say
One word of comfort! I, so close at hand,
So near to you and yet so far away,
Can only pray that you may understand!

THE PASHA AND HIS FORTY WIVES.

One day, when I was at Constantinople, I asked the Turkish minister if it was true that the sultan had turned his back on the triple or quadruple alliance, and had given in his adhesion to the Franco-Russian instead. He replied that the policy of the Porte was to flirt with all the powers without attaching itself to any one of them, and to declare confidentially to each sovereign that it preferred him to any other. "It is the system of Ahmed Pasha," he added, "and it is best for the preservation of peace at home. By-the-by, do you know the story of the Pasha and his forty wives?" And he went on to relate what follows:

Ahmed, a sturdy fellow from Anatolia, had covered the person of the sultan with his body in a riot of the janissaries. This act of devotion had won for him the eternal friendship of his sovereign, who showered untold wealth upon him, and in the end made him a full-blown pasha.

Having to spend his days in a vast konak, which was put at his disposal by the Commander of the Faithful, Ahmed Pasha found the means of improvising a Mohammedan paradise on a small scale. He had four legitimate wives and thirty-six odalisques, or slaves, who were ready to obey his every caprice.

This motley household—you would hardly believe it—was, nevertheless, the most peaceful in Stamboul. Jealousy did not make consumptives of a portion of these young people, as was the case in other harems. They never had recourse to those magicians who boasted their powers of divining the favorite, whether by shuffling cards, or throwing beans, or counting the beads of a chaplet, or looking into a well, a mysterious book, or the hand of the subject. They never crossed the threshold of Duyumlu Hodja's cabin to ask him the secret of gaining the exclusive affection of their husband, nor did they visit the house of the witch to whom public opinion attributed the gift of warming anew the heart of the lover, by placing close to the fire a plate on which she wrote down cabalistic letters. They did not seek to rid themselves of their rivals by uttering charms on a lock of their hair, the parings of their nails or the rents in their garments, nor in seasoning with witchcraft, if not with poison, their food and their drink. This unalterable peace was the topic of all the neighborhood, and the old Turks shook their heads, being unable to penetrate the mystery. One of them had the courage one day to ask the secret from the pasha. He answered, with a smile, "I have a talisman, it is true, but it will only be known when I die."

The happy mortal was pleased to call together from time to time his forty houris to the salon of the haremlik.

While puffing away at his chibouk he passed them in review; he looked as proud as a cock in his hen-house, and said, laughing to himself, "You are all beautiful, Mashallah, but my heart belongs to the one who has the turquoise ring. She alone is my favorite." And each one answered with a cunning smile, "Dear Pasha, to whom, then, have you offered this ring? I would have given up everything to be in her place!"

But it is written that everything shall come to an end in this vile world. One night a great commotion suddenly roused the whole quarter. Ahmed Pasha was dead, and his forty wives heaved piteous sigh over his corpse. "Ah!" cried a Georgian woman, "I shall not be able to survive my poor pasha. He had forty wives, but he told me over and over again that I was his only favorite, and as a proof of his predilection for me he handed me in secret this turquoise ring." And she took the precious talisman from her pocket. At these words each of the thirty-nine widows displayed a similar ring, and declared that the deceased made the same declaration tete-a-tete to her. The strategem of the old fox was unmasked, but too late to alter his happiness. He had lived forty years in the society of forty rivals, and the peace of his harem had not been disturbed for an instant.—London Sketch.

BOTH PLEAD GUILTY.

These are some of the things that a man thinks a woman cannot do:

Keep a private expense account and have it balance.

Wear a linen collar or a linen shirt waist, starched as stiff as a man's, and keep her temper.

Buy a pretty necktie.

Order a dinner from a bill of fare.

Tie a "four-in-hand."

Understand a game of base ball.

Or a game of foot ball.

Go to church and not notice the other women's bonnets.

Abstain from talking fashion.

Play whist and remember what's trumps.

Refrain from drinking ice-cream soda in winter.

These are some things that every woman knows that a man can't do:

Build a grate fire and make a success of it at the first attempt.

Remember to wear his smoking jacket when he smokes.

Put his ashes in the ash receiver.

Sit in a chair without taking the tidy with him when he gets up.

Refrain from tying the pillow shams into knots and throwing them into corners.

Abstain from drawing the curtains back as far as they will go and sending the window shades skyward with a bang.

Use his comb without having something to say about the long hairs he finds in it.

Listen to stories about other men's smart children.—Chicago Record.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

and their attendants were none too many. Not one dollar less than $100,000

will satisfy us for the month of December. This loss we anticipated, as our season's profit. Our season's buying has been on the "Spot Cash" system from importers and manufacturers at about half value or less. Nothing but "Spot Cash" can do our present business. The long credit business must be done by firms who get long prices and slower returns. Odd and behind style garments will be sold or all of which will give honest service for a nominal price. Our buyer has a weakness in OVER-BUYING for this market. This has been a phenomenal season to buy goods UNDER VALUE from best importers and manufacturers. We have averaged to buy one stock a week through the entire season until our building is overcrowded on every floor. Some entire stocks have not been shown to the RETAIL TRADE, and cannot be ready for exhibition until to-morrow morning. All persons, far or near, that have any of the above goods to buy with READY MONEY can buy them now.

HALF OF HALF PRICE,

We have a bureau of correspondence. All letters of inquiry promptly answered. All orders accompanied with bank checks and P. O. Orders filled within an hour, and money refunded if not satisfactory. We do not issue catalogs or cuts, as it is impossible with a stock that changes every week.

Miss Venner, in soft grey silk, fleecy laces and white roses, made a lovely bride, and a little later electrified the village folk by coming into church leaning on the arm of a tall, handsome gentleman and followed by Jack.

The sermon, as befitted the day, was about Jesus' love of little children—"Whosoever shall receive one such little child in my name, receiveth me;" and, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me," said the preacher, in solemn impressive voice. Then was heard the tender plaint of the organ, and full glorious notes—Gloria in Excelsis! sang the white-robed choir; the air was full of the pungent odor of Christmas greens, and the sweet, faint perfume of flowers; the sun shone down through the stained windows, resting like a blessing on little Jack's curly head, softly lighting Alicia's peaceful face, brightening the silver threads in Carruth's dark hair, and seeming a broad purple and golden pathway leading to a higher, nobler life.—Gody's Lady's Book.

THE OLD WOMAN SAVED HIM.

"I have been in Mexico for thirteen years, traveling at least half the time, and yet I was never held up by bandits but once," said Mr. Butler Talbert of Oaxaca. "I had been out at Tlacalula and was on my way back in the stage which at that time started in the afternoon and did not reach the plaza here until after dark. As I was getting up beside the driver an old woman came up and begged to be taken on board. There was plenty of room for her inside, but she lacked a dollar of having enough money, and the driver refused to take her.

"She turned away without a word, but was such a look of distress in her face that, acting on an impulse, I called her back, gave her the dollar and helped her on board. Now, that dollar was invested better than any dollar I ever had, though I simply gave it because I felt sorry for the woman. It was not even real charity in me, for I gave it more to save my own feelings than to relieve her, but so it happened.

"We bowled along at a fair pace behind the mules. It was a lovely road, save for the dust, and I had forgotten the woman entirely when, as we approached the salt works that lie in the marsh some miles this side of Tlacalula, I heard some one say:

"'Senor Americano! Come down here!'

"The old woman I had assisted had her head out the side of the stage, and wanted me to come and sit beside her. I tried to beg off, for I expected her to make me miserable by an overwhelming torrent of thanks, but there was something in her voice this time that made me once more give attention to her. There was not ample room for another inside, but a Mexican, who had wanted the seat beside the driver, was very glad to exchange with me.

"It is well," said the old woman, in a low voice, as he climbed to my place. "He is of no account, but you are my friend."

"I was astonished at what she said, but she began crooning over her beads before I could say a word, and the stage swayed along until we had passed the first row of salt pans where the willows are so thick. Then it seemed to me as if the whole thicket was turning to fire and smoke on one side of the road, while the splinters flew from a dozen holes in the coach side, and I felt a tug at my coat across the shoulders and everybody but me and the old woman tumbled down on the coach floor. Highwaymen had attacked us by firing before they spoke. The driver and his seat mate were both killed, and the top of the coach was shot to pieces, but the only missile that flew low enough to hit any one there was the one that cut my coat on the shoulder.

"Of course the rascals swarmed into the road as soon as they had fired and ordered us down. I turned to help the old woman, and she said: "Good, you do well." They stood us up beside the road in a row and blindfolded all but me and the old woman. As they came along with the rags to tie over our eyes she put her hand on my arm and the leader of the gang passed both of us. Then every soul but us two was robbed clean, while the two dead men from the driver's box were stripped naked.

"Then a man who had unconcernedly dipped brine from a hole in the marsh and carried it to the pans during the melee was called and ordered to drive the rig through to town. He did as he was ordered without a word, and after a delay of say ten minutes we were on our way again.

"So far as I could see none of the passengers had observed that I and the old woman had escaped robbery, and you may be sure I was not saying anything about it. Nor did I mention my escape in town here for years after. I could have put the soldiers on the right trail for the robbers, I doubt not, by telling what I knew about the old woman, but I took pains to make her comfortable instead, because she had saved my life. But why she should have been anxious to take the coach that was to be robbed, and how she knew that I was in danger, and why or how she was able to protect me, I did not learn nor even try to. It is a good man that knows when not to be inquisitive, especially in this country."—New York Sun.

Deacon Ironside (after the service)—"Elder, I got in a little late this morning, but I don't think you had any right to take it out of me in your sermon."

Elder Keepalong—"Take it out of you, how?"

"Get back at me. Ain't that what you did? I hadn't hardly got inside the door when I heard you say: "And now comes the worst of them all, the chief rebel against the government of heaven.' And then you went on describing my character, and putting all my failings in the worst light you possibly could. You didn't mention no names, but I knew who you was driving at, and I must say, Elder, that I don't like this way of—"

"But, my dear Deacon Ironside, you totally misapprehend. The subject this morning was 'The Rebellion in Heaven,' and when you came in I was trying to picture the depravity 'of Lucifer, the arch-apostate. I am truly sorry, deacon, if I seemed to—"

"Never mind, Elder; never mind. We'll—h'm—we'll say no more about it. Ruther a nasty morning, ain't it?"—Chicago Tribune.

SIMPLE WAY TO KEEP CIDER SWEET.

There are many processes given for keeping cider sweet. The simplest of all, perhaps, is this given by the Scientific American: Pure, sweet cider, that is arrested in the process of fermentation before it becomes acetic acid, or even alcohol, and with carbonic acid gas worked out, is one of the most delightful beverages. The following scientific method of treating cider will preserve its sweetness: When the saccharine matters by fermentation are being converted into alcohol, if a bent tube be inserted air tight into the bung, with the other end in a pail of water to allow the carbonic acid gas evolved to pass off without admitting any air into the barrel, a beverage will be obtained that is a fit nectar for the gods. A handy way is to fill your cask nearly up to the wooden faucet, when the cask is rolled so the bung is down. Get a common rubber tube and slip it over the end of the plug in the faucet, with the other end in the pail. Then turn the plug so the cider can have communication with the pail. After the water ceases to bubble, bottle or store away.

A NEW PARABLE.

There was an old darkey in southern Illinois who wanted to join the ministry. He had progressed through many years of trial and tribulation from the position of chief hog stealer and henroost robber of the community to the mourner's bench, to membership, to a deaconate, and finally to the dignified office of sexton and chief bell ringer of the white folks' church in the same town. He couldn't read, but his granddaughter Lucindy could, and he made her read to him every evening from the good book, and prayerfully paddled her she might fear God. He was finally brought before the board of examination, which was conducted as follows:

"Brer 'Lias, do you know the Bible?"

"Yas, praise de Lawd."

"Brer 'Lias, do you believe it to be the word of God?"

"Yas, dat I do, praise de Lawd."

"Do you believe the parables?"

"Dat I do. Ever' w'ud ob dem par'bles is facs, sho nuff. Gospel troof."

"Do you know any of them well enough to repeat, Brer 'Lias?"

"Dat I do. I knows dem all, but dat one of Potiphar and Jezebal is de truest an' mos' powerful one ob all. Hit goes dis away. You see, Potiphar was ridin' down in his charyit f'm Je'usalem into Jericho. He drove 'long lil bit w'en long come Jezebal. She say: 'W'ite man, gimme a ride, an' he done tuk 'er up behin' him in his charyit. An' dey went erlong a lil furder an fell among t'ieves. An' dey say: 'Frow down Jezebal!'

"An' Potiphar he say, 'Let him among you widout sin cas' de fus stone.'

"But dey say all de louder, 'Frow down Jezabal!'

An' finally he frew down Jezebal. But dey warn't satisfied an' yell, 'Frow down Jezebal!'

"An' he frew her down ergin. An' den dey yel out, 'Frow her down some mo'. An' he frew her down seben times. But dey was dat mean dey warn't satisfy nohow, an' dey kep' a hollerin' 'Frow down Jezebal!'

"An' he frew her down sib'nty times seb'n. An' ob de remains dey g-dered up seb'n basketsful."—Washington Post.

"Look here," said the editor of a New Mexico paper to his reporter, "you refer to a 'Twelfth Night' scene, from Shakespeare's play."

"Yes, sir."

"Well, young man, it may be just as well for the credit of this paper and for your future comfort, to remember that there were only Ten Nights in a Bar Room, and that Shakspeare didn't write the play, anyhow."

And he stalked haughtily forth.—Washington Star.

My Christmas Partner.

Dumb is the grove's full-throated lay;
Shadows of night o'erspread the bowers;
Yet, as from the full lap of May,
Come light and life and love and flowers.
I recognize her beauty's might—
Her magic might that knows not guile;
Storm clouds before her glance are bright,
And summer lurks beneath her smile.

Is it from spirit or mortal hand
My own receives this raptured thrill,
As waiting partners now we stand,
Now weave the chains of my quadrille?
Is it an angel whom I pray
To clasp forever through the years,
As in the devious waltz we stray,
And whirl round with the whirling spheres?

How shall I know?—The Christmas tree
Attracts a crowd of joyous faces;
Yet 'tis her presence that for me
Makes rich the shrub of gifts and graces,
Trembling, as with my fate I cope,
I draw—she also draws, apart—
My prize, a snowdrop—'tis my hope;
Her's a gold locket—lo, my heart!

From pain to pleasures, bliss to pain—
Tempests and zephyrs come and go;
Beneath green leaves we meet again,
The tender sacred mistletoe.
I pay my court by backwardness,
And her sweet blushes understand,
That till her lips have falter'd "Yes,"
M ne worship only on her hand.

My Christmas partner! partner still;
For the blest season lengthens out,
Beyond the waltz and the quadrille,
Beyond the night of ball and rout.
Spring, summer, winter once again,
One season only knows my life
Of peace and of good-will to men—
My Christmas partner is my wife.

FARMER JONES'S CHRISTMAS.

"What in the name of common sense have you got there?" asked Farmer Jones's wife, as he came into the room bringing a turkey under his arm that could not have weighed less than 18 pounds.

"I've got a turkey, of course. Did you think I was going to celebrate Christmas without a turkey?"

"Of course not, but how do you think we are going to make away with a turkey as large as that? Why, it will last us two weeks, if we eat turkey three times a day, every day."

"I think we will invite some company. I want you to cook the bird and make all the necessary preparations for having several extra people to dinner and supper, besides Betsey Bates, whom I'm going after now to help you to do the work."

"Mercy me, who is coming?"

"I'll find some one, don't you fret. We've eaten dinner alone on Christmas for the last time. We've always invited some of our relations from the city to come out and spend the day with us, but they never come, for they think they will get more presents by staying in the city. Don't you remember that parable about the wedding guests that did not come, and how they went out into the byways and invited every one that they found. I'm going into the byways, and invite some people who have no relations to look after them, and who hardly have enough to eat, let alone having a turkey at Christmas."

"That's just like you, father, and I'm glad you are going to do it. I'll get up one of the best dinners I ever cooked. How many do you think you can get to come?"

"I know of seven, anyway. How many will that bird feed?"

"Fifteen at the least, and not pick the bones very clean either. Don't let's have less than 15."

"All right, mother, 15 it is then," and the old man started out after Betsey Bates, who frequently came over to help the old couple when they needed any one to do any extra work.

As he was going down the steps his wife called to him:

"Say, father, if you should think of more than 15 invite them all, for we can kill a few chickens to help out with."

"Yes, wife, I'll invite every one I can think of who ain't provided for."

* * * * * *

"Say, mamma, will we have any Christmas this year?"

"I'm afraid not, dear. You know we are very poor."

"I don't care for myself, but I do wish we could have something for Alice."

"So do I, Charlie, but I don't see how I can have anything more than usual. I have not had much sewing to do lately, and I have no money to spend for anything but just enough to eat."

Charlie Thorne turned away and went out of doors so his mother might not see him crying. He was the oldest of a family of three children, and his sister Alice, whom he dearly loved, was a cripple, and for her he would have sacrificed anything. He was only 13 years old, but he had done some work for the farmers in the summer, and every cent that he could earn was given to his mother to buy something for Alice, who was 10 years old. Carl, the youngest, was only four, and as long as he got enough to eat he was happy. He could not remember anything better, but it was only three years since Mrs. Thorne had been in comfortable circumstances, and her older children remembered the merry times they had before their father left them.

Without thinking where he was going Charlie turned into the road and walked down toward Farmer Jones's. He had not gone far when he was met by that old gentleman, who was on the way to notify Betsey.

"Good morning, Mr. Jones," said Charlie.

"Good morning, Charlie; is your mother at home?"

"Yes, sir."

"I guess I'll stop now and give you all an invitation to come up to our house to eat Christmas dinner. We are all alone now, so I am going to ask in some of the neighbors to help us make merry. Do you think she will come?"

"I guess she will, for it was only a few minutes ago that we were saying that we should not have any Christmas this year. I can draw Alice up on my sled."

"I'll come and get you all in my big sleigh on Christmas morning. I'm going after all my guests with my sleigh."

By this time Mr. Jones had arrived at Mrs. Thorne's house and he and Charlie went in. He had called on Mrs. Thorne several times before, and had helped her more than once, by sending potatoes, corn and such things to her, but he had never learned just how she came to be so poor. As he entered the house, he made up his mind to inquire about her former home and friends.

"Good morning, Mrs. Thorne, I came in to see if you and your family would come over to our house and spend Christmas with us. We are all alone now, and want some one to come and help us to make merry. You will come, won't you?"

"I should be very glad indeed to accept your invitation. But Alice is such an invalid that it is hardly right to take her among people. We have to carry her everywhere."

"Never you mind that. I'll come after you with my big sleigh, and we will have plenty of folks there to help move her around."

"If you think it will not be too much trouble to have us three I should like to come very much on the children's account. They don't fare very well since their father was taken from us."

"Is your husband dead?"

"Oh no, haven't you heard of our trouble?"

"Not a word."

"If you have time, I will tell you the story."

Farmer Jones took a chair and Mrs. Thorne said:

"Three years ago last month my husband was bookkeeper for a large firm in the western city of Clinton. By some means his accounts were meddled with by some one, and because he would not say he did it the firm had him put in prison. Some of the clerks swore that they saw him in the store one night when I knew he was at home. So many of them were against him that he was convicted and sentenced to ten years in prison."

"What is the firm's name?"

"Wilson & Wilbour."

"You don't say, why Wilson went from this town."

"Then you know him?"

"Oh yes, know him well."

"Do you suppose you could say anything to him to prove my husband's innocence?"

"I don't know, he is a mighty mean man to do any such thing as that. I'll have to be going now. I'll be after you Christmas morning with my big sleigh; good morning," said Mr. Jones in such a hurry that Mrs. Thorne thought she must have provoked him by asking him to help her husband.

Could she have heard him talking to himself as he went down the road she would have thought differently.

After seeing Betsey, he hurried home. As he came into the house he said: "Mother, won't you pack me a clean shirt and a few collars. I want to catch the 11 o'clock train."

"Where on earth are you going?"

"I'll tell you why I'm changing my clothes. Betsey's coming to help you and she's going to stop and get Mr. Jenkins's man to come over and do the chores while I'm gone."

* * * * * *

"Mr. Wilson, I believe," said a nice-looking old gentleman as he stepped into the private office of Wilson & Wilbour of Clinton.

"Why, Mr. Jones. I'm delighted to see you, pray take a seat, how are the folks at home?"

"Excuse me, but I don't care to sit in the presence of such a rascal. You will meet me at the office of Sharp & Co., 21 Green street, at 11 o'clock. Good morning," and Farmer Jones, for he it was, turned and walked out of the office, leaving Mr. Wilson looking very white and frightened.

"I wonder what the old man means," he said to himself as soon as he was alone. "I think I'll take what ready money I can raise and get out of the city before he knows what I'm about." Mr. Wilson went to the safe, took out a large amount of money, put it in his pocket and taking his overcoat passed out into the store. Going to the head clerk he said:

"I'm summoned to New York on very important business. Tell Mr. Wilbour that I will be gone about a week."

"Very well, sir," said the clerk.

As he stepped out of the store and hastened down the street, a nicely dressed gentleman crossed the street and followed him. He went straight to the depot, and as he was about to step upon the train the nicely dressed gentleman took his arm and said:

"Beg pardon, sir; but you are forgetting your appointment with Sharp & Co. Come with me quietly and quickly, or I will call those two officers who are looking at us."

Mr. Wilson went with the detective, for such he was, to the office of Sharp & Co., where he found the three lawyers who composed the firm, and Mr. Jones, waiting for him. Just about the same time Mr. Wilbour, who had also been sent for, came in.

"Now, Mr. Jones," said Lawyer Sharp, "please tell these gentlemen why they were sent for."

"I sent for them to give them the choice of serving a term in prison, or of telling such a story to the governor of the state as will cause the release of Mr. Edward Thorne from prison. Not only that, but they must pay Mr. Thorne $10,000 for the trouble they have made him."

"What do you say, gentlemen?"

"Who is this man that he should blackmail us in this way?" asked Mr. Wilbour.

"It is no case of blackmail," broke in Mr. Wilson, "this is Benjamin Jones's brother. He holds the power to shut us up if he pleases, we must comply with his terms. When can we see the governor?"

"He is in the other room, I will call him," said Mr. Sharp, going to a door and opening it.

"How do you do, Jones," said the governor, shaking hands with Mr. Jones.

"Nicely, thank you. You are looking about as young as ever, I see."

"Yes, I don't seem to grow old very fast. What can I do for you?"

"Mr. Wilson has a request to make of you. Mr. Wilson, allow me to introduce to you Governor Webb, an old schoolmate of mine. Please tell him what you know about Mr. Thorne, who was your bookkeeper three years ago."

"We have found out that we were mistaken about his meddling with the books; it was some one else, and we would like to take steps to have him released at once."

"Oh, you have discovered the real criminal, have you?"

"Yes sir; and we are so sorry that we have been the means of putting an innocent man in prison that we are willing to pay him a good round sum for his trouble."

After some further talk Mr. Wilbour and the officer went out and soon returned with bank drafts to the amount of $10,000, which they placed in Mr. Sharp's hands.

While they were gone the governor wrote a pardon for Mr. Thorne, and in less than two hours Mr. Jones and Mr. Thorne were on their way east. Mr. Jones did not say a word to Mr. Thorne about the money, but saved that for a Christmas present. They arrived at Farmer Jones's house about 8 o'clock Christmas morning, and in half an hour the happy old man was out with his big sleigh after his invited guests. He first got the Thornes, and when they were comfortably settled in the big sitting room he stepped out and called Mr. Thorne. I shall not try to describe the meeting of Mr. Thorne with his family. That it was a merry Christmas to them all will not be denied.

When dinner time came 19 people sat down to dinner and the most of them were children.

Such a dinner. Turkey, chickens, mince pie, apple pie, cranberry sauce, old-fashioned raised cake, apples, nuts, raisins, oranges and bananas were so plenty that every one had enough and lots to spare.

Then after dinner Farmer Jones took all the children into the parlor and played blind man's buff in a way none of them had ever seen before. After he was blindfolded he would say:

"Fe, fi, fo, fum,
I smell the blood of an Englishman;
Be he live or be he dead,
I'll grind his bones to make my bread."

Then he would rush into the room and try to catch some one. He must have peeked, too, for he played till he had caught every one of the children. Then he sat down and told them stories, and played other games with them. At 9 o'clock the old house was still, for the guests had all departed except the Thornes, who were to stay with Mr. Jones till a suitable house could be got ready for them, "for," Mrs. Jones said, "the little place where Mrs. Jones had been living was not suitable for cold weather."

After the children had been tucked in bed Mr. Jones said: "Now, Mr. Thorne, here is the money that Messrs. Wilson & Wilbour were willing to pay you for the mistake they made in putting you in prison. It is small pay, I know, but it is all they could raise at that time," and he handed the draft to Mr. Thorne.

"Oh, no, I cannot take all that," said Mr. Thorne, "if they will pay me for my lost time that is all I ask."

"Would you be willing to go to prison for three years and leave your family to get along as best they might for $10,000?"

"No, nor for ten times that."

"No, of course you wouldn't; so you see you are not very well paid after all. Don't say another word. You were sent to jail to cover up their tracks. By the aid of my brother, who is a detective, and my acquaintance with Mr. Wilson, I managed to get at the whole secret of their plot. I'm sorry I did not know of it before."

"All's well that ends well," said Mrs. Thorne, who was so happy at the return of her husband that she could forgive every one.

"How can I ever pay you for this great kindness?" asked Mr. Thorne.

"Well, suppose you give me that little girl of yours. We are very lonsome here—mother and I—and we would like to have some young chick around."

Mr. Thorne looked at his wife and then at Mr. Jones as if to see if he were in earnest. There was a twinkle in the farmer's eye and Mr. Thorne knew at once that he had some proposition to make and was only asking him to give him his daughter to open the way.

"What can you mean, Mr. Jones?"

"I mean that I want that little girl here in my house all the time. I must have her, too, so I will make you a proposition to take the old farm and run it next summer, all I'll ask is to have you live here with us, so we can have the children around; don't answer to-night, talk it over and decide to-morrow."

They did decide to stay, and that is the reason the old Jones farm is considered by the young folks of the town the best place in the world to go and have a good time. Mr. Jones spends all his time driving little Alice, whom he calls his girl, around, and the doctor, who comes up from the city every week, says that in another year she will be able to walk about as well as any one.

Charlie is very happy because his sister is getting well, and he says its all come about by going to Farmer Jones's to eat Christmas turkey.—Henry D. Taylor.

CHRISTMAS PIES OF YE OLDEN TIME.

The hearty Christmas cheer of old was never shown more bountifully than in the wonderful pies that were the pride of every good housewife's heart, and there were, no doubt, plenty of little Jack Horners eager enough to pop their thumbs into the savory contents, for we find in a very ancient book that "every family against Christmas makes a famous pye. It was a great nostrum, the composition of the pasty, which is a learned mixture of neat's (cow's) tongue, chicken, eggs, sugar, raisins, lemon and orange peel, and various kinds of spicery." They were baked in long deep dishes representing the manager in which the infant Jesus was laid, while the rich ingredients were supposed to have some reference to the offerings of the wise men.

Some of these pies were of such enormous size as to make our modern pastry sink into insignificance, while the substantial portion seems to have been more thought of than the sugar, plums and spice. One that in 1769 was concocted by Mrs. Dorothy Patterson, a housekeeper at Howick, and sent to her master, Sir Henry Grey, is said to have contained two bushels of flour, twenty pounds of butter, four geese, two turkeys, two rabbits, four wild ducks, two woodcocks, six snipes and four partridges, two neat's tongues, two curlews, seven blackbirds and six pigeons. It measured nearly nine feet in circumference at the bottom, and weighed 168 pounds. To be served at table it was fitted into a case on four wheels, and two men pushed it around from guest to guest.

A still larger Christmas pie, however, was presented by James, Earl of Lonsdale, to King George III.; for that contained two geese, two tame ducks, two turkeys, four fowls, six pigeons, six wild ducks, three teal, twelve partridges, three starlings, fifteen woodcocks, two guinea fowls, three snipes, six plovers, three water-hens, one wild goose, one curlew, forty-six yellow-hammers, fifteen sparrows, sixteen chaffinches, two larks, four thrushes, fifteen fieldfares, six blackbirds, twenty rabbits, one leg of veal and half a ham, while the crust required three bushels of flour and 28 pounds of butter. This huge specimen of cookery weighed 308 pounds, and had to be borne through London on a two-horse wagon, and I am sure all will agree that it was a "dainty dish to set before a king."—Harper's Young People.

an entertainment, but Crowder once having committed himself was determined to make it a success. The children sat in solemn quiet; they were grave, thoughtful small people, as befitted those reared in the shadow of mighty mountains, within the sound of avalanches and shut in all the winter months as if the world outside had never been. The Hebrew gentleman, christened Jay Gould, came with the conductor, and hearing of the offering laid down a dollar, the first payment received. Crowder looked at it scornfully.

'I wonder he don't ask fur a private box,' he growled under his breath, but pleasantly assured the conductor the entertainment was on himself and he guessed the railroad company wasn't paying extra salaries or giving anything away. The porter from the car brought up the emigrants, the men in their queer wrappings, the women blonde and placid-faced, each leading a child and carrying a baby. Crowder thoughtfully gave them a bench near the stove.

'Them Swedes can stand a deal of heat, and it's comfortable for the babies,' he said by way of apology to the Rev. Mr. Boice, and to him Jim was wonderfully and painfully polite.

Ten Chinamen came up the stairs in single file. They rustled in their best attire, but their faces, impassive and calm, betrayed neither interest nor excitement at the uncommon occurrence. The leader stared vaguely at Mr. Boice.

'I pay doller,' he said, suiting the action to the word, and after him nine yellow claws each laid a round silver piece on the bar.

'Go in, John,' smiled Jim, full of Christmas good-will, even Chinese. 'All you Johns, there's a wood-box there you can have.'

They sat in a mournful row the evening through, their calmness a contrast to the animation of the rest of the audience.

Three women, haggard and painted creatures, came furtively up the stairs; one, wasted and worn, a feverish light in her big eyes, stepped forward to Jim, who met her with a scowl.

'I sent word none of your crowd was to come,' he said coldly.

'I've brought money, Jim,' she faltered. 'I'd like to hear music; I'm sick, ain't long for here anyhow. We'll behave all right.'

'Let her in and we two'll go home,' said a second woman, 'give the poor soul some comfort.'

'May they be my guests?' asked the old clergyman, leaning forward. 'You will admit them, won't you, Mr. Crowder?'

Jim went and got them chairs near the stage. He said no word; he felt ashamed somehow, and not square.

The clatter of horses' hoofs on the frozen snow and the sound of men's voices in loud expostulation with refractory steeds showed that the miners had arrived. Soon bearded men trooped in and some, as they passed, laid down a bag of gold dust or a shining coin, while others left a nugget of pure gold. Later the offerings were more generous, as Jack Farley headed the delegation from the Yankee Maid. Every man was carefully attired in his best; his hair well greased, and there were many gay neckties and much show of gold watch-chains.

'Things is humming,' said Crowder. 'The boys is feelin' good-humored, so no matter how rotten the show is there won't be no kick.'

The shuffling of feet and moving of chairs gradually subsided. Molly, peering out from the poker-room back of the stage, announced that the audience was evidently all there.

'Do see those little chairs,' she said, 'and those solemn little souls! Don't you know a child's piece, Dan?'

'I used to—one about Christmas. I gave it before a Sunday school once—yes, I did,' he asserted, as the blonde giggled, 'and it made a hit. Go ahead, Dick, and begin the agony.'

Dick obeyed; made his bow as he ascended the stage, and tuned his violin. His hand trembled a little. The shadow of death was in his violet eyes and pale face. Those big-hearted miners wished the offering had been large; they would have applauded any tune he played.

He forgot, as he played, the strange place and the people; his mind went far across the plains to a little gray farmhouse near an old New England town. He was a boy again, in summer woods that were all alive with whispering leaves, the song of birds, the ripple of a brook. He saw the sunlight fall in slanting rows, and heard the summer wind sighing of sweet South lands where it had wandered. He went over the pasture hills, and followed the cows along a ferny path, and then he saw again the light of home streaming from the narrow pane. A little figure in the doorway waiting to greet him. He might be a failure, go back sick, poor and helpless, but she would love him just the same, and thank God for his coming. Then his room under the eaves, the white bed where he had dreamed of the great wide world that some day he might conquer. Father, bowed with eighty years, would come tottering up the stairs 'to talk it over, son,' and then would fall to telling stories of old days and merry ones. The violin followed all Dick's thoughts, and now from grave to gay as sunshine after rain, until at last the melody, all happiness and brightness, ended in one harmonious chord. Dick, dazed and startled, rose; he did not understand for a moment. Then he bowed to the applause and played an encore, something merry and jolly; but never in his life could he soar so high as that first air, or find it ever again.

He was forced to beg a release from further playing; he must be orchestra for all, and then the blonde in fine array, with the first accordion-plaited skirt seen at Timberline, gave the skirt-dance with bewildering variations, and after the encore remained a radiant vision in many a miner's heart; and Dan said seven bearded men had asked whether she was married or single. Dan's recitations, too, were a great surprise to himself—they seemed to please so well. During the story of the boy and Santa Claus all the small rockers vibrated with rapture. Even at Timberline stockings are hung by the chimney, and eager ears are listening in the late hours of night for the tinkle of bells. The sleighing is so fine, and are not the mountains the home of the antlered elk! What better steeds could Santa Claus desire, so mighty, swift and strong?

Then Molly sang 'Annie Lauric' and 'Swanee River' so sweetly that they have never forgotten her. Some of those men, now twice millionaires, go always to hear her when they see her name in big letters on the posters, for she is a noted singer; but they say her voice does not sound as it did that night at Timberline, nor does she look so fair and girlish, nor make the tears come as she did then.

Dan gave his masterpiece, 'The Miser,' with all contortions, shuddering and appearance of grasping greed, and flushed and excited by his work he felt a cold chill at his heart when the audience broke into roars of laughter, and cheered until the roof trembled.

'I am glad I am funny,' said Dan ruefully in the poker room. 'I did think I was doing high tragedy.'

The door opened softly, and the Hebrew gentleman came in.

'By gad, sir, that was funny!' he said heartily. 'I don't know when I've laughed so much. It was great! You've got the face, I can't see why you would not make a hit. I'll talk with you tomorrow. I want a man for farce-comedy. I just ran in to tell you to make you feel pleasant, as you seem out of luck, and, seeing the blonde looking at him wistfully, 'your wife dances well, too. I might do something for her. Here is my card.'

The little man bowed and vanished, and Dan, with a dazed look, gave the card to the girl.

'It's him—I know him now,' she said. 'He's a big manager, and Danny, you will catch on. Just try to be tragic and you'll be funny.'

'Thank you, dear: you see he thinks you are my wife, from your way of talking. I'll be tragic enough when you are, and I don't see why we should not begin the new year by being miserable together.'

Her face softened to girlish prettiness as she half turned away from his encircling arm.

'I don't know yet, Dan—if the luck turns.'

Molly had sung 'Nancy Lee,' and then, as they insisted on another song, she stooped and whispered to Dick. He began to play an old-time tune—one of the sweetest ever written, but strangely out of place in that audience. The hall grew very still.

'Backward, turn backward, oh time, in your flight,
Make me a child again, just for to-night.
Mother, come back from the echoless shore,
Take me again to your heart as of yore.

Never hereafter to wake or to weep,
Rock me to sleep, mother, rock me to sleep.'

The audience had all dispersed when the tired performers came out; only Crowder and Jack waited with the Rev. Mr. Boice at the door. Dick leaned heavily on Molly's arm; he was very tired.

'Just sit a minute,' said Crowder, kindly. 'You see, the boys have got a little surprise for you folks. The camp's flush. They'd heave it away on cards—not that I'm running down my business, which is always a fair game; but it ain't no loss to 'em. Nor am I sorry I gave up this evening's profits. The best show I ever went to by long odds! The boys all brought down a little stake, which we've counted up; something like five hundred dollars that you folks kin divvy up between you. Don't thank me—it was Jack's idee, and the boys all wished they'd brought more.'

The performers stammered their thanks, their voices husky. Molly openly wiped the tears away.

'I can't find the words,' she said to Jack (and how he thought of that lovely, tear-wet face in the long afterwards!) 'I would like to tell them all—all those kind men. You will, for me, say it was the best gift we ever received, and came at our darkest hour.'

'The Reverend and me will carry the cash down to the train,' said Jack quickly, something blinding his vision. 'I guess the preacher found himself playing a part out of his line.'

'I enjoyed it all,' smiled the old man, shaking hands with Mr. Crowder, while Jim warmly reciprocated, and added that if 'he ever was in Boice's town he'd come to his place and hear him preach.'

The moon was high in the heavens; all the mountains were shining silver, as if the hidden ore had melted and formed a glittering crust; myriads of stars sparkled in the clear sky, and the shabby little town in such a setting looked fair and homelike with its lighted windows. A woman waited by the outer door; she stepped forward to Molly's side.

'Thank you for that last song,' she faltered, with a heart-breaking sob. 'It seemed as if it was a message from the mother I've got to meet so soon.'

'I saw your face in the audience,' said Molly, putting out her hand. 'I sang for you. You looked so sad, so lonely.'

'So lost,' the other muttered. 'You sang like an angel. God bless you!' and she glided away like a shadow into the darker shadows of her life.

In the car was warmth and comfort and the pleasant smell of food. The Hebrew gentleman was all smiles and welcome.

'The porter and I have arranged a Christmas spread,' he said affably. 'I wanted to do something after that delightful evening. Mr. Crowder has promised to come later. Mr. Farley, you will stop, of course. I don't know about the champagne; it will taste good, anyway. You don't drink, Mr. Boice? Well, fill his glass with water. Let's begin by a toast—to friends at home, a Merry Christmas to them all.'

A Merry Christmas to all—at home, on land, at sea, in mountain solitudes and lonely plains. Black as the barren moon will this round world be when there is no Christmas cheer, no peace and good-will on earth.—Patience Stapleton.

WHY HE CARRIED CRUTCHES. A man with crutches and a badly broken udappearance sat on a lounge in an up town hotel and talked to a group of acquaintances.

"You may talk about your horrifying experiences," he said, "but a while ago when I was out West I had one that was a hair-curler. I was awakened from a sound sleep in the middle of the night by the cry of fire. I jumped up and found my room full of smoke. I rushed to the window, looked out and saw that the hotel was one mass of flames. Then I climbed up on the window-sill, closed my eyes and jumped."

"And," broke in a sympathetic bystander, "that is why you carry those crutches, I suppose?"

"No; not exactly. I slipped on a banana-peel the other day. That night my room was on the ground floor."

Mary's mother one day gave her a cent to buy some candy. As the little girl went down the street she discovered a beggar boy on the front steps of a neighbor's house. She was five years old, and a cent seemed to her a good deal of money. She looked first at the boy and then at her cent. Finally with a smile she stepped up to the forlorn child and said: "Here little boy, take this cent and go and buy yourself a suit of clothes and some dinner."—Youth's Companion.

A Dear Little Schemer.

There was a little daughter once, whose feet were
—oh, so small!
That when the Christmas Eve came 'round, they wouldn't do at all.
At least she said they wouldn't do, and so she tried another's,
And folding her wee stocking up, she slyly took her mother's.
"I'll pin this big one here," she said—then sat before the fire,
Watching the supple, dancing flames, and shadows
darting by her,
Till silently she drifted off to that queer land, you
know,
Of "Nowhere in particular," where sleepy children go.
She never knew the tumult 1are that came upon the roof;
She never heard the patter of a single reindeer
hoof;
She never knew how Some One came and looked his shrewd surprise
At the wee foot and the stocking—so different in size!
She only knew when morning dawned, that she was safe in bed.
"It's Christmas! Ho:" and merrily she raised her pretty head;
Then, wild with glee, she saw what dear old
"Santa Claus" had done,
And ran to tell the joyful news to each and every one:—
"Mamma! Papa! Please come and look! A lovely doll, and all!"
And "See how full the stocking is! Mine would have been too small,
I borrowed this for Santa Claus, it isn't fair, you
know,
To make him wait forever for a little girl to grow."

M. M. D., in St. Nicholas.

A FEW NEW FANCIES FOR CHRISTMAS.

Photograph frames are made in the manner described last week for tissue paper, and may be covered with china silk, velvet or plush, embroidered or painted with heads or bunches of flowers. I have seen a beautiful frame 7 by 9 inches made of the finest white linen embroidered all over with tiny flower heads and sprays about an inch apart. Another smaller frame of the same material had a vine embroidered around the opening. White china silk embroidered with flower heads is very beautiful. Cream, ivory and pure white lansdowne are also used. Indeed, white is the favorite color this year.

A new style of pincushion is made as follows: Cut from Lonsdale cambric two circles four or five inches in diameter. Cut a straight strip from the Lonsdale about three inches wide and as long as the circumference of one of the circles. Make a cylindrical shaped cushion of these pieces of cloth, using the circles for the two ends of the cylinder and the strip for the sides. Stuff the cushion with ground cork, which may be obtained from a fruit dealer, or with bran or wool. Put a layer of white wool or a very thin layer of cotton into which sachet powder has been sprinkled, over one circle and sew over that a cover of Lonsdale. Embroidery flower heads and tiny sprays about three-fourths of an inch apart for a cover for the top of the cushion. This embroidered cover may be made of the finest white cotton, linen lawn or china silk. Cut it about two inches larger in diameter than the circles of the cushion, but have the embroidery only cover a circle of the same size as the ends of the cushion. Make a skirt of silk in color to match the flowers of the embroidery, about a yard long and enough to stand out full around the cushion. Hem one edge of the skirt and turn the other edge over and make a run into which sew a piping cord. Draw the cord and the thread till the skirt top will exactly fit around the outer edge of the embroidery of the top of the cushion, and sew on the skirt. Make another skirt of white lace or white net and sew on over the silk skirt. Or the two skirts are sometimes basted together and one cord and run answers for both. When lace net is used a ribbon is run in at the top of the net skirt and the skirt is sewed to the cushion under the ribbon. These cushions are made in quite a variety of sizes, but the form of a cylinder is preserved, whether they are high or low, large or small. Forget-me-not, rosebuds, heliotropes and other designs in small flowers are used, with blue silk for the skirt of the forget-me-nots, pink for rosebuds, etc., etc.

Crochet work is very much in vogue, made of fine cotton or of silk. Lamp shades, brush cases, music rolls, photograph frames, made of pasteboard covered with silk or satin and over that a crochet cover, are among the very latest novelties. They are very beautiful. Patterns for the crotchet work may be had of the dealers who sell the materials for crocheting.

Pads for rockers are made oblong, with a ruffle around them like small cushions. They are tied to the chairs with ribbons. The prettiest of these are made of figured china silk with the ruffle of plain silk doubled. There are pretty printed oblongs of silk silkene and cotton, made expressly for chair head rests and for sofa cushions.

Pretty penwipers for college boys are shown. Make a flat round penwiper of chamois skin. Cover with one thickness of felt of the college color. On this sew the handsome head of a doll. Fit around the doll's neck a black stole collar. Put upon its head an Oxford cap. The collars and caps are cut from thin cardboard to fit the doll, and are then covered neatly with black silk or fine black woolen. The collar is tied on with ribbons of the college color. The Princeton penwipers of orange felt, upon which rests the handsome head having a black stole collar tied with orange ribbons and a black cap, is especially striking. FRANCES V. DOANE.

REVOLVERS

Highly useful to have in these days of tramps and robbers.

A prominent Englishman, Lo rd D., and a proverbial hater of America and Americans, was dining lat ely in Paris with the British minister, and next to him at the table was a noted Newport belle, Miss X. The conversation had drifted to a discussion of things American. It is needless to say that Lord D. made some pretty disagreeable remarks about some Americans he had met, and some Yankee customs he abhorred "Why, d'ye know," he continued, with an almost unpardonable want of tact, "that at some of the places I dined in in America I saw people eat with their knives and spill the soup on the table-cloth?" Miss X. was thoroughly provoked by this time, but she replied with an apparent unconcern: "What poor letters of introduction you must have had, my lord." There was no more unpleasant talk about America that evening.—Harper's Bazar.

CHRISTMAS NIGHT SIX HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

Let us go back in immigration some six hundred years. It is Christmas night. In every town in Europe the bells are ringing merrily, and the people, noble and simple alike, are streaming toward the church or cathedral, each family or group preceded by its lantern-bearer, for street lights are few and far between. We will suppose ourselves in Chester, in Rouen, in Verona, or in Seville—the name and the place matter little, the mediæval Christmas usages from the eleventh to the sixteenth century being the same all over western Europe. Matins have just ended with the "Te Deum," and there is a movement of expectation in the church and a rustling of feet, for before the celebration of mass we are to assist at the dramatic office of the Shepherds. Behind and above the altar is placed the manager or Creche, and beside it an image of Saint Mary. Five canons of the first rank, or at least their vicars, wearing the sacerdotal tunic, and over it the amice, or linen gown, represent the shepherds, and form a group in the transept in front of the entrance to the choir. The shepherds carry crooks, and have with them real sheep and dogs, and attendants with musical instruments and rustic offerings of fruit. We may imagine how picturesque and impressive this Office of the Shepherds must have been in some Lombardian church where the architecture lent itself to effective pantomime. We may figure to ourselves the shepherds, feigning some to sleep and some to watch their flocks, when suddenly in the stillness of the church, all richly decorated with tapestry, drapery, garlands of evergreens, and with a profusion of candles, a boy dressed as an angel mounts, artlessly with the aid of a ladder, the wall beside the ambon, or small pulpit, and there, after the musicians have sounded a long and piercing trumpet blast, the angel intones in Latin these verses from St. Luke: "Fear not, for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you; Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger." Thereupon a number of singing boys, posted in the galleries in the clere-story of the cathedral—aux voutes de l'eglise, says an old Rouen manuscript—and representing the "multitude of the heavenly host," begin to sing, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth paace, good will toward men." And from the indications of the old manuscripts, and from the judgements of competent critics, we may conclude that the music which accompanied this office was very grand and simple, for the plain song was supplemented by special melodies, and the music of brass and of stringed instruments was employed besides that of the organ.

Meanwhile the shepherds enter by the great gate of the choir, and advance slowly toward the altar and the manger, chanting a rhymed Latin hymn, "Pax in terris." Arrived at the manger, they are met by two priests of the first rank, wearing the long white dalmatica and figuring two midwives, who asked them, "Quem quæritis in præsepe, pastores dicite!" (Say, shepherds, who seek ye in the manger?) And the shepherds reply, "Salvatorem, Christum Dominum." (We seek the Saviour, Christ the Lord, the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, according to the angel's words.) Thereupon the two priests figuring midwives drew a curtain and show the child Jesus to the shepherds, and bid them announce the nativity to the people. The shepherds kneel in adoration, and salute the Virgin with a rhymed Latin hymn. After which they return professionally through the choir, singing: "Alleluia! Alleluia! sing all his coming, and say with the prophet, Unto us a child is born." These words from the Introit of the Christian mass, which begins immediately, the shepherd-priests directing the choir—pastores regant chorum, says the Rouen manuscript—and reading the lessons from the lectern.—Theodore Child, in Harper's Magazine.

ORIGIN OF THE CHRISTMAS TREE.

Christmas has come to be regarded, too, as especially a children's festival. The custom of stealthily hiding money and other presents in the stockings of children after they have retired to bed on Christmas Eve—which presents are said to be sent by Santa Claus—is derived from a Continental practice. On St. Nicholas eve presents are surreptitiously put in children's shoes and slippers, and the little ones are told that these presents were brought through the windows, though they were shut, by St. Nicholas. The custom is founded upon a tradition, according to Brand, that St. Nicholas, in his lifetime, was in the habit of throwing purses of money in at the windows of poor maidens to be used by them as marriage portions. But whatever the origin of the custom, it is one that is a source of ardent expectation, of great pleasure, and of happy reminiscences to most English children. Then there is the Christmas tree, specially designed for the delectation of children, loaded with its presents, which has become a prevailing fashion in England. What can be more enjoyable, even to old people, than to watch the eager expression on the faces of the little ones as they stand around it awaiting the distribution of the prizes! There is a popular belief that this custom originated in Germany. Such, however, is not the fact. The Christmas tree is from Egypt, and its origin dates from a period long anterior to the Christian era. The palm tree is known to put forth a branch every month, and a spray of this tree with twelve shoots on it was used in Egypt at the time of the winter solstice as a symbol of the year completed.

"So," said Jaxon, "our Chicago friend, Blower, has a new boy at his house." "Yes, and he has named him Hamlet." "That's a queer name; Blower n't at all literary or dramatic, is he?" "No, but he's a pork packer."—Detroit Free Press.

Challes—"Aren't you going out with me?" Henwy—"I cahn't go until I dress, can I?" Challes—"What's the matter with your present costume?" Henwy—"I haven't got my chrysanthemum on."—Chicago Record.

"What is your idea of a dude?" he asked of a bright Washington girl. "A dude," she answered after reflection, "is a young man who isn't good for anything except to hang a chrysanthemum on."—Washington Star.

Best Cure For

All disorders of the Throat and Lungs is AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It has no equal as a cough cure.

Bronchitis

"When I was a boy I had a bronchial trouble of such a persistent and stubborn character that the doctor pronounced it incurable with ordinary remedies, but recommended me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I did so, and one bottle cured me. For the last fifteen years I have used this preparation with good effect whenever I take a bad cold, and I know of numbers of people who keep it in the house all the time, not considering it safe to be without it."—J. C. Woodson, P. M., Forest Hill, W. Va.

Cough

"For more than twenty-five years I was a sufferer from lung trouble, attended with coughing so severe at times as to cause hemorrhage, the paroxysms frequently lasting three or four hours. I was induced to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and after taking four bottles was thoroughly cured."—Franz Hoffman, Clay Centre, Kan.

La Grippe

"Last spring I was taken down with la grippe. At times I was completely prostrated, and so difficult was my breathing that my breast seemed as if confined in an iron cage. I procured a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and no sooner had I began taking it than relief followed. I could not believe that the effect would be so rapid and the cure so complete."—W. H. Williams, Cook City, S. Dak.

Not Much of a Christmas.

We didn't have much of a Christmas,
My papa and Rosie and me,
For mamma 'd gone out to the prison
To trim up the poor pris'ners tree;
And Ethel, my big grown up sister,
Was down at the 'sylum all day
To help at the great turkey dinner,
And teach games for the orphans to play.
She belongs to a club of young ladies
With a "beautiful objick" they say,
'Tis to go among poor, lonesome children,
And make all their sad hearts more gay.

And auntie, you don't know my auntie?
She's my own papa's half-sister Kate,
She was 'bliged to go round at the chapel
Till 'twas—oh—sometimes dreadfully late!
For she pities the poor, worn-out curate,
His burdens, she says, are so great;
So she 'ranges the flowers and the music,
And he goes home round by our gate.
I should think this way must be the longest,
But then, I suppose he knows best.
Aunt Kate says he intones most splendid;
And his name is Vane Algernon West.

My papa had bought a big turkey,
And had it sent home Christmas eve,
But there wasn't a soul there to cook it,
You see Bridget had threatened to leave
If she couldn't go off with her cousin
(He doesn't look like her one bit).
She says she belongs to a "union,"
And the union won't let her "submit."
So we ate bread and milk for our dinner,
And some raisins and candy, and then
Rose and me went down stairs to the pantry
To look at the turkey again.

Papa said he would take us out riding;
Then he thought that he didn't quite dare,
For Rosie 'd got cold, and kept coughing;
There was dampness and chills in the air.
Oh, the day was so long and so lonesome!
And our papa was lonesome as we;
And the parlor was dreary—no sunshine,
And all the sweet roses—the tea,
And the red ones, and ferns and carnations
That have made our bay window so bright,
Mamma 'd picked for the men at the prison,
To make their bad hearts pure and white.

And we all sat up close to the window,
Rose and me on our papa's two knees,
And we counted the dear little birdies
That were hopping about on the trees.
Rosie wanted to be a brown sparrow;
But I thought I would rather, by far,
Be a robin that flies away winters
Where the sunshine and gay blossoms are.
And papa wished he was a jail bird,
'Cause he thought they fared the best;
But we all were real glad we weren't turkeys,
For then we'd been killed with the rest.

That night I put into my prayers,—
"Dear God, we've been lonesome to-day,
For mamma, aunt, Ethel, and Bridget,
Every one of them, all went away.
Won't you please make a club or society,
'Fore it's time for next Christmas to be,
To take care of philanterpist's fam'lies,
Like papa and Rosie and me?"—
And I think my papa's grown pious,
For he listened, as still as a mouse,
Till I got to amen;—then he said it
So it sounded all over the house.

—Julia Walcott.

THE REASON THAT "DEACON" AND "TEX" DID NOT GO TO THE DANCE.

Two grotesque and greatly elongated shadows seemed exerting themselves to the utmost to maintain their proper relation to two horsemen, whose sturdy "cayuse" ponies were carrying them swiftly across the brown prairie of late Indian summer. The red ball of the sun seemed to pause an instant when the far off rim of the prairie half hid its face. Then the long shadows grew less and less distinct, and, presently, as the sun dropped from sight, below what seemed the edge of the world, they ceased racing with the fleet cayuses and their cowboy riders.

"Tex," said one of the horseman, suddenly, "seems like you could see the sun move, It sinks so fast just as it is settlin'. Ever notice it?"

"Nope," was the answer. "Don't reckon I ever did."

"Wal, I have, many a time. I wonder—"

"Yes," broke in the other, "you're allus wonderin' about sumpin'. Got no time to waste in wonderin' now. Hafto hustle to attend to our leetle business with the granger an' git to Ole Man Shannon's in time for the dancin'."

The speaker emphaizsd his remark with a pop of his three-thonged "quirt" whip on the branded hip of his pony, and both animals increased their speed to a keen gallop. Even in the fast-falling twilight, the unusual smartness of attire of the two cowboys was apparent. The silver wire around the puffy looking bands that encireled their broad hats gleamed brightly, as if from a recent scouring, and about the throat of each cowboy was a flaming silk handkerchief. The bright embroidery on the fronts of their woolen shirts was unhidden by coat or vest. Had the huge revolver been drawn from its holster at the right hip of each cowboy, it would have shown the bright effect of prolonged polishing. It was evident that the coming festival at Old Man Shannon's was to be no common affair, worthy only of hasty preparation.

"Deacon," said the cowboy, "Tex," suddenly, "tell you what s a fact; I wouldn't miss the shindig at Shannon's for—wal, for a heap!"

"Nur me!" promptly replied his comrade, the "Deacon." "Nellie Hicks will be thar!"

"Yes an'—an'

Texas, "for short" called "Tex," seemed bashfully confused.

"An' Luddy Bender?" "Deacon" suggested.

"She'll be thar!" crid Tex, enthusiastically. "Deak," he added, with a burst of confidence, "Lyddy's the slickest girl' twixt this an—"

"Cept Nellie Hicks!" interrupted the deacon gravely.

"Wal, I—" began Tex.

"Thar's a fire!" broke in his comrade.

The swift falling twilight of the plains had deepened to darkness and the campfire beside the "branch," or small creek, sent little shafts of light dancing hither and thither among the trunks of the paw-paws that fringed the half dry water-course. The cowboys halted at the brow of the slope that fell away to the creek. "Tex," said the deacon, "what do you think uv this idy uv removin' grangers offer the range, jest because they air grangers?"

"Think it's right!" returned Tex, promptly. "What business have they got here, cuttin' the range all to pieces with their durned truck patches?"

"The law gives them the right to settle—"

"Hang the law!" interrupted Tex, fiercely. "If the law had its way there'd be a granger on every quarter! But we sorto look out for that," he added grimly, "an' the grangers don't stay long, somehow. Don't like the climate, mebby!"

Perhaps it was dislike of the climate, but, more likely, the abbreviated sojourns of the hated grangers were due to the energetic opposition of the cattle men. In the sight of the law, "grangers," as the cowboys scornfully denominated the seekers for homesteads, had as good a right if not a better right on the range than the cattle kings, who owned little of the land and pastured over a great deal of it. The "truck patches," as the cowboys called the farm, threatened to limit the feeding grounds of the broadhorns, and so, while the cattle kings were not openly hostile to the grangers, they were often conveniently blind to any rough treatment that their reckless employes, the cowboys, bestowed upon them.

"Got mighty leetle time to fool," said the deacon. Can't miss Ole Man Shannon's. Nellie Hicks will—"

"So'll Lyddy Bender!" interrupted Tex. "Tell you what we'll do," he went on. "Slip up an' see how the land lays. Then we'll jest simply walk up an' tell him that he's 24 hours to git out uv the country in. That's all!"

"Less'n he cuts up rusty," said the deacon.

"Let him cut!" retorted Tex. "We're able for any granger 'twixt this an' the line, I reckon!"

"I reckon we air!" agreed the deacon.

The flickering firelight did not reveal two figures that crept down the slope, and crawled, in a silent, snaky fashion, through the tall grass and underbrush among the paw-paws, and cautiously peered between the wheels of the old covered wagon. Queer, distorted shadows danced hither and thither, as the passage of the flickering light was interrupted by the granger moving about the campfire.

It lit up his worn, anxious face, as he bent over a little figure, stretched on a rude couch of quilts, a little way back from the fire.

"Wouldn't some of this broth taste good, Benny?" the cowboys heard him question, with a world of tenderness in his voice.

The watchers could hardly hear the faint reply feebly lisped by a sick child, a baby, almost, lying on the couch of quilts.

"No," the baby's voice piped, weakly. "I'm not hung'y, poppy."

Then, after a pause, it went on feebly:

"Oh, I want ole Santa C'aus to come! C'ismas most here; ain't it, poppy?"

"Most here, Benny," answered the granger. "Most here."

The baby's head, that seemed startlingly large for the poor little wasted body, rolled uneasily from side to side on the old pillow. The baby's face was flushed and burning with fever, and his eyes were unnaturally bright.

"Ole Santa'll bring me sumpin' nice; won't he poppy?" quavered the little voice.

It seemed weaker as it piped, mournfully, a moment later:

"Awful long since I've had anythin' nice!"

The granger turned away. He covered his face with his hands and groaned. The watchers thought they saw a tear or two trickle through his fingers.

When he looked up, startled by the snapping of a dry stick, a cowboy, in all the bravery of holiday attire, stood before him.

"Poppy," piped the baby, "is that Mister Santa C'aus?"

"No, he hasn't come yet," answered the granger, soothingly.

Not the ghost of a smile crept over the face of himself or of his visitor at the bare possibility of mistaking that broad-hatted, beweaponed individual in embroidered shirt and stained "chap" leggings for the patron saint of good children.

The cowboy's solemn face, that had won for him the nickname of "Deacon" looked, if possible, more grave than usual.

"Baby bad sick?" he questioned laconically.

"Yes," returned the granger, "mighty sick."

"W'y'n't you git a doctor? 'Fraid to leave the baby alone?"

"Yes. I don't dare to leave him, I—"

"Ort to have a doctor," interrupted the cowboy.

"I know it! I know it!" answered the other, hoarsely. "But what can I do? I dare not leave him alone! He might—he might not be alive when I get back! An' if I stay—"

"I'll stay!" broke in the deacon. "Git!"

There was a slight rustling just beyond the farthermost wheels of the wagon. As the granger strode to his horse, the deacon shook his fist at the darkness beyond the old wagon and the rustling ceased.

As he saddled and bridled his horse, the granger told of the baby's illness. He had been growing weaker for days, but, until the day before, the granger had not realized the child's dangerous condition.

"Where's his mother?" questioned the deacon.

"Dead!" said the granger, huskily. "He always was pindling, and since—since he's been without a mother he's been getting weaker and weaker every day. We came out here on the range 50 miles west, to try to make a little home. It—well she died, an' the baby—"

He paused and gulped as if choking back a sob. "I am trying to get back to the old place in Iowa," he resumed presently. "Mebby I will; mebby I won't. The baby—"

"What's this Christmas business?"

"C'is'mus 'most here, poppy," piped the baby's voice.

"'Most here, darlin'," soothed the granger.

As the baby had grown weaker and weaker, he had dwelt constantly upon the coming of Christmas and good Saint Nicholas, the granger told the solemn cowboy. The one great event of the baby's life had been the celebration of the last Christmas, and, to the little one, the happy time was so long ago in the past, that it seemed to him that the glad day must surely be almost at hand again.

"Even if we were poor," said the granger, "we celebrated as well as we knew how, and the baby thought it was the finest affair in the world. His mother was alive then," he added, slowly. "There were many little treasures that the childish heart coveted, but there seemed no hope of possessing them except through the kind offices of Santa Claus."

"I had to tell him that Christmas is almost here. I am afraid the disappointment of knowing that it is nearly two months off would make him worse," whispered the granger. "Mebby even, it would—"

"Light out for the doctor!" interrupted the deacon. His face was turned away, as if he did not wish the other to see his eyes which glistened with moisture.

"Poppy is going for the doctor, Benny," said the stranger, bending over the baby.

"I'm 'f'aid to stay alone," the little voice quavered.

"But you want to be strong an' well when Santa Claus comes—"

The deacon stepped forward. "I'm goin' to stay with you," he said. "I know ole Mister Sandy Claws, an' I'll tell him 'bout you if you're a right good boy an' don't cry for yer poppy."

"Oh, I'll be awful good!" the faint voice piped.

As the granger rode away in the darkness, there was a rustling just beyond the old wagon.

"Will to-morrow be C'is'mas?" the baby quavered eagerly.

"W'y, it—I—" began the deacon.

Texas, his comrade, came into the firelight.

"Yas, leetle one, to-mor'll be Chris'mus!" he said positively. "For the baby, anyhow," he added, under his breath.

"Tex," said the deacon, "Nellie Hicks won't—"

"Neither will Lyddy Bender," interrupted Tex. "I hain't goin' to ole man Shannon's."

Then, before the deacon could reply, he asked:

"Deak, what do they give children fer Chris'mus?"

"Blamed if I know. Knick-knacks, I reckon."

"I reckon so."

"An' nice things," chirped the baby. "Can'y an' p'ture books an'—"

"Knick-knacks cost money," said the deacon, solemnly, as he drew a bank book from his pocket and handed it to Tex. "Do you reckon your cayuse is runner enough to beat that granger to town an' back an' give you time to buy—"

But Tex had disappeared in the darkness, and two minutes later, the deacon heard the receding footfalls of a fleet cayuse.

"C'is'mas is comin' to-morrow!" chirped the baby's weak voice. "Comin' to-morrow!"

"Yes, comin' to-mor'," agreed the deacon, rubbing his eyes with the back of a red hand.

The child seemed strengthened by the hope, and presently his eyes closed, and lulled by happiness, he dropped asleep.

The deacon tiptoed away in the darkness. Returning ten minutes later, he brought a little cedar, cut down by his huge jackknife. He removed the double-tree pin from its hole in the wagon tongue, and sharpening the cedar stem, he thrust it into the hole Then he sat down by the fire to await Tex's return.

"Reckon they're havin' a big time at Ole Man Shannon's," he muttered, presently. "Nellie Hicks will be thar, sure! Wisht—"

He glanced at the baby, smiling in his sleep, dreaming of the happy morrow.

"I don't wish no sech thing!" the deacon muttered, hoarsely. Several hours passed before Tex tiptoed to his side, as he nodded by the campfire. "Knick-knacks!" Tex explained in a loud whisper, as he held up a bundle.

The October Christmas tree presented a truly festal appearance when the two broad-hatted Santa Clauses finished hanging the simple gifts upon it. There were various toys, a woolly horse, a tin trumpet, a rubber doll with a villainous leer, and candy galore.

"Tex," said the deacon solemnly, as they stood admiring their work, "we're a gallus lookin' pair of Sandy Clawses; hain't we?"

"You bet we air," agreed Tex.

There came the sound of galloping horses beyond the crown of the slope, and the two Santas disappeared from sight in a twinkling.

Half an hour later, the first gray light of coming morning revealed two cowboys in holiday attire, riding slowly across the prairie in the direction from which they had come upon the previous evening.

"Tex," said the deacon, "did you see the look on the baby's face when the coming uv his father an' the doctor woke him, an' his eye fell on the Christmas tree?"

"No," returned Tex. "The blamed bushes was in my way."

"He looked like—wal, I don't know as I kin tell it, but the look uv happiness that come over his little pinched face made him look as beautiful as—as—"

"As Lyddy Bender?" suggested Tex.

"Yes, or Nellie Hicks," said the deacon.

"Doc said he 'lowed the happiness saved the baby's life," said Tex. "It give him the sound sleep he needed so much."

"Reckon it did. Wisht 'a' seen the baby's look uv happiness."

"Wisht you had, too. Looked prettier than Nellie Hicks."

"Yes, or Lyddy Bender!"—Tom P. Morgan, in Drake's Magazine.

BURDETTE ON PROFANITY.

Suppose you are given to the habit of profanity. You enter into conversation with a man who never swears, or, in other words, a gentlem an. By and by you begin to perceive that he is a superior man. Your own remarks have a tame, flat, feeble sound to your ears. Your cheeks begin to burn with a sense of your friend's excellence. Your pert little damns sound coarse and drop out of your sentences, ashamed to remain in the company of good, honest words, until, as you discover that you are carrying on your part of the conversation without swearing, you feel easier, and your intellectual stature is increased by a foot. Just observe this, my boy, and see if I am not right.

But you will rip out sometimes! O, yes, in some way you will. I know some good men—some of the best in the world—who will "confound it," and in New England even a deacon has been known to "condemn it." But, as a rule, my son, don't do it. Don't swear. It isn't an evidence of smartness or worldly wisdom. Any fool can swear. And, a great many fools do. I, my son? Ah, if I could only gather up the useless, uncalled-for swears I have dropped along the pathway of life, I know I could remove stumbling blocks from my inexperienced feet, and my own heart would be lighter by a ton than it is to-day. But if you are going to be a fool just because other men have been, O, my son, my son, what an awful, what a colossal, what a hopeless fool you will be.—R. J. Burdette.

THE ESSENCE OF GOOD BREEDING.

The essence of good breeding is simplicity—not the simplicity of the peasant, although that is good in its way, but the simplicity of the really civilized man who has arrived at a kind of artificial naturalness. The natural man has been fitly described as a "noisy, sensual savage." Civilization teaches him to be quiet, to mind his own business, to refrain from offending or disgusting his neighbors, to respect himself, to stand on his own basis.

Now, if the essence of good breeding is simplicity, it may be said that the essence of vulgarity is a want of simplicity. To be vulgar is to be unquiet, to have no taste of one's own, to be in continual disturbance on account of one's neighbor, either by way of truckling to him, which is the manner of the snob, or of hating him, which is the vice of the radical, or of competing with him, which is the weakness of the parvenu. To be vulgar is to adopt other people's language, to use their cant phrases, to copy the inflections of their voices, to espouse their ideas—in fine, to think, and do, and say, not what comes naturally to one, but what is supposed to be considered proper by other people. Thus, to be vulgar is to lack simplicity.—Atlantic Monthly.

THE SPOON MUST GO.

The new code of table manners is a piece of awful tyranny. It forbids sugar and vinegar on lettuce, sugar on strawberries and in claret, and banishes the spoon. Even the elusive pea must be hunted and harpooned by the fork, ice cream must be gathered and carried to the mouth with the same weapon, and the strawberry, now happily departing, must also be impaled before it can be tasted. The knife was made a back number many years ago, but people surrendered it easily because there was danger of making the mouth larger, which in most cases is unnecessary. But to be denied the spoon after so much outlay for Columbian souvenirs is, in the language of A. Ward, "2 mutch." Our new authorities on table manners should take warning by the downfall of Ward McAllister and Berry Wall.—Troy Times.

GETTING HER LOCATED JUST RIGHT.—Down in Nova Scotia it is a commom habit when speaking of people to specify them by the name of the town they came from. Two Nova Scotians were speaking of a friend of both of them one day. "She's an exemplary woman, declared one of them at last. "Not a bit of it," retorted the other hastily. "She's a Barrington woman. I knew her father and her mother both."—Somerville Journal.

Contentment.

Happy face 'neath the tattered bonnet,
Merry eyes matching the ribbons on it;
What matter the old, torn shawl and gown!
With her sunny hair for a golden crown
She's the richest queen in all the land—
With her happy face under the bonnet.

Her kingdom, the billowy meadows fair;
Her subjects, the birds and butterflies there;
Her wine, the dew in the floweret's cup,
Which she quaffs with glee, ere the sun is up.
She's the proudest queen in all the land,
With her winsome face under the bonnet.

She cares not for fashion, cares not for fame,
She knows not sorrow—to her, but a name.
She wears bright jewels, the wildflowers sweet,
And they lift their heads her smile to meet.
She's the happiest queen in all the land,
'Neath her old and faded bonnet.

To those who are blest with wealth untold,
Comes not such joy as her life doth hold
They think they are happy—how little they feel
The sweet content her eyes reveal!
We may find if we search through all the land
A queen 'neath a tattered bonnet.

BROWN BREAD AND BAKED BEANS.

"Cookin' stoves is all well enough in their way, fur as they go," remarked Abel Sprout, with a half-contemptuous look on his face, to his grandson, Joshua, who had just displayed the kitchen of his new house with great pride, "but give me an old-fashioned brick oven fer the real thing, that's all I've got to say.

"Who knows how things'll turn out f'm one o' these new-fangled stoves? Got to keep a-watchin' of 'em, an' tendin' an' fixin' draughts, an' the land knows what all, the whole 'durin' time. I reckon Bill Flagg wouldn't 'a' got much of a Sunday breakfast if he'd had a cookin' stove, time o' his

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 22, 1893.

MATTERS are approaching a crisis in Brazil and the new cruiser New York and the monitor Miantonomah have been ordered there.

THERE are some consolations which the hard times bring. The number of immigrants this year is only 365,000, the smallest number since 1889.

ON general principles what money-making things strikes are. The recent one on the Lehigh railroad cost the road some $700,000 and the men $140,000 more. And what good came of it? None. Neither side gained a point.

YOU never can tell how much good charity may do. The influences may be more far-reaching than your most sanguine hopes. At Chicago the other day the police captured a murderer at one of the free soup resorts established for deserving poor.

CANDIDATES for the presidency in 1896 are already bobbing up, and Senator Voohees of Indiana and Vice President Stevenson think they would run well on the Democratic ticket. At the present rate with which the party is making votes its candidates at that time will feel mighty lonesome when the returns are in.

WHEN the Chicago aldermen think they can get a pull on the voters money is no object, especially when the city pays the bill, but "no returns no money," seems to be the motto. They appropriated $1000 the other day to entertain the leaders of the American Federation of Labor, but could find no power to appropriate a cent for the starving poor of the city, who number thousands.

THE new head of the Knights of Labor says that he is opposed to strikes, in which he differs from the former executive. And judging from the falling off in numbers in the ranks of the Knights during the past few years the members were not unanimously in favor of this way of settling disputes. They were usually beaten, and with the loss of wages and all it was a bitter dose to swallow.

THE president on Tuesday nominated Wayne McVeigh of Pennsylvania to represent the United States in Italy, in place of James J. VanAlen, who declined the appointment on account of the talk occasioned by his contribution of $50,000 to the Democratic campaign fund last fall, it being claimed that the appointment was in return for the gift. Mr. McVeigh was promptly confirmed by the senate.

THE big strike at Olneyville, R. I., which involved some 5000 operatives, came to an end Monday, after an existence of 10 weeks. The strike was originally to resist a cut-down of about 20 per cent, but two weeks ago the manufacturers agreed to throw off 6½ per cent, but the workmen would not agree. The hard times and the suffering of their families however convinced them that they had better take this than remain out of work all winter.

THE supreme court of Indiana decides that a property holder can obtain damages for the injury to his premises by the near location of a saloon, the case being brought by a woman in Indianapolis. She had houses on a fine residence street which were greatly depreciated in value by the location of a saloon next them. She alleged that the saloon was a nuisance and damaged the selling and rental value of her property, and the supreme court decided that the fact that the state requires liquor to be sold under a license and under bonds to keep an orderly place, shows that the law regards the traffic as in a degree "dangerous to public and private morals," and hence liable to injure property in the vicinity of the saloon.

ONE of the encouraging signs of the times is that pugilism is growing into disfavor, even in localities where it once was courted. Louisiana, where so many contests have been held, will have none of them now, and for some time those two eminent plug uglies, Corbett and Mitchell, have been trying to find a place in which they could hammer each other without fear of molestation from the officers. This has been a hard thing to do, place after place having to be given up, until the other night the city council at Jacksonville, Fla., passed an ordinance permitting the contest. The mayor vetoed it and the council passed it over the veto. There is still a prospect that the governor will step in and prevent the mill.

SOMEWHAT of a sensation has been stirred up during the past week by the demanded resignation of Nicholas Hathaway of Fall River, one of the commissioners appointed to have charge of the construction of the buildings for the Medfield insane asylum, and the removal of the other two, Jeremiah Murphy of Worcester and H. M. Federhan of Quincy, the latter two being charged with incompetency, and the former with taking a bribe in connection with the appointment of the architect, Mr. Tobey. Two checks, one for $100 and one for $400, from Timothy Shea of Boston, who urged Mr. Hathaway to appoint Tobey, have been acknowledged, but Hathaway claims that they were in the form of a "gift," and in no way as a bribe. The public will look at the matter in quite a different light, however. Gifts of this kind are not made for nothing. It is supposed that there is another check of $1000, but it has not been traced as yet.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S message to Congress on the Hawaiian question, which was given Monday in response to a request from both branches for information as to the instructions given Minister Blount, is in some respects a remarkable document, emanating as it does from the chief executive. It lacks that dignity which such documents should possess, in the president's severe criticism of private individuals, for in it he practically accuses Mr. Stevens, the ex-minister to Hawaii, of deliberate falsehood. The larger part of the message is given to a sharp criticism of Mr. Stevens's actions while at Honolulu, and an open questioning of the truth of his statements. In speaking of the submission of the treaty, now withdrawn, to the senate with the statement that the overthrow of the monarchy was not in any way promoted by this government, "both president and senate were misled." Touching on the reasons which led the "merchants and traders" at Honolulu to favor annexation to the United States, he says that "it is sufficient to note that the project was one which was zealously promoted by the minister representing the United States in that country. He evidently had an ardent desire that it should become a fact accomplished by his agency and during his ministry, and was not inconveniently scrupulous as to the means employed to that end." It must be remembered that Stevens was on the ground when the events occurred, while Blount was not, having to form his opinion from what he had told him several months afterward, when it would seem that the supporters of the queen were the only ones credited with knowing anything about the matter. As to his instructions to Minister Willis, now at Honolulu, they were that this government would aid in the restoration of the old government to power provided the queen would recognize the bona fide acts and obligations of the provisional government, and grant a general amnesty to those concerned in its organization, but this she refuses to do, and further action is awaited. Advices received yesterday from Honolulu state that the government has framed an ultimatum in which it declines to negotiate for the restoration of the crown, and declares that it will resist with military force any and every attempt to overthrow the provisional government.

A Former Palmer Physician's Enterprise at Worcester.

The following account of the dedication of the private hospital of Dr. J. K. Warren at Worcester last Friday will have much of interest for his many friends here, where he was engaged in practice before going to Worcester. The account is from the Worcester Spy of the 16th:

An institution which gives every promise of having a most valuable and important future was formally dedicated and opened at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon. It is the private surgical hospital which Dr. J. K. Warren has established and equipped at 68 Pleasant street, just above the First Universalist church. It is the first homeopathic hospital ever established in Worcester or Worcester county, and will have the cordial and especial support of the local homeopathic physicians, many of whom were present at the hospital yesterday afternoon. The attendance of the general public was so large that the house was crowded almost to excess. The exercises were opened with prayer by Rev. Archibald McCullagh, D. D., pastor of Plymouth. Dr. J. K. Warren, founder of the hospital, made a short address of welcome and outlined the purpose of the institution. He also read a letter of apology from the mayor. Rev. Dr. McCullagh made an interesting address, in which he paid high tribute to the medical profession, the members of which are called upon for greater self abnegation than are those of any other profession. Alluding to the financial features of the institution Dr. McCullagh announced that a gift of $150 will furnish a room and give to it the name of the donor; $12 will be the cost of a bed in the ward for one week; $100 for ten weeks, $500 for one year, $5000 will endow a bed permanently for six months each year, and $10,000 will endow a bed perpetually. Dr. C. L. Nichols referred to the rapid growth of the homeopathic idea in medical practice. In 1850 there was but one practicioner of that school in Worcester county; to-day there are over 60. Boston and four other Massachusetts cities have homeopathic hospitals similar to that they were dedicating. The science of surgery and the cure of the sick have made such wonderful advances in recent years that the mortality rate has everywhere been materially decreased. Willis E. Sibley, Esq., spoke for the legal profession, stating that arrangements had already been made for the establishment in the near future of a public homeopathic hospital. Dr. J. K. Warren then invited the visitors to inspect the institution and to luncheon. The building has been remodeled throughout, so as to fit it for its special purposes, and there is an air of homelike coziness and comfort about the different rooms which does not in the least suggest the traditional hospital ward. The floors are laid in polished hardwood, and the walls of the ward and of the private rooms are hung with water colors and etchings, which impart a delightful air of brightness and restfulness to the surroundings. The operating room is on the top floor. The walls are covered with glazed "tile" paper, which can be sponged clean at any time, and the floor is covered with water-proof linoleum in one piece, so that not a drop of moisture can percolate through. The room has none of the appearance of an ordinary hospital operating room, and the patient is not shocked on entering by the sight of an array of instruments. These are all kept in a cabinet. There is accommodation for some 15 patients in all. Dr. F. R. Warren will have charge of the house, and will have the assistance of a matron and trained nurses. The whole institution is from bottom to top a model of neatness and cleanliness. Special rates will be charged, as agreed upon, for the private rooms.

S. J. Rogers is painting his house on Park street.

Miss B. Bowler of Lowell is visiting her sister, Mrs. J. T. Denning.

C. E. Fuller has been quite sick this week with an attack of the grippe.

Miss Maude Loomis of Lenox spent Sunday with Mrs. Charles Atkins.

The work of stringing the wires for the Postal Telegraph line has commenced.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Northrop have been visiting friends in Springfield this week.

J. J. Helliwell and family will spend the Christmas vacation with friends in Worcester.

A special meeting of the library association is called for next Thursday evening at 7. 15.

Good Cheer Rebekah Degree Lodge will elect officers at the meeting next Tuesday evening.

William Nelson of Tenneyville, who has been ill for the past three weeks, is now on the gain.

Holden & Fuller's woolen mill started again Monday, but with a cut of 10 per cent in the wages.

The sale of pews in the Congregational church will take place next Wednesday evening at 7. 30.

The Woronoco Whist Club met at the Converse House Tuesday evening with Mr. and Mrs. B. P. Morse.

F. H. Eastman, wife, and son of Merrick spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Eastman on Park street.

Harry Willard, a former employe of the Palmer Electric Co., visited friends in town the first of the week.

Station Agent Rice of the Boston and Albany road has been confined to his house this week by sickness.

Mrs. A. T. Wing had the misfortune to lose her purse, containing about $60, on the street Monday afternoon.

The hay, straw, rye, corn, etc., at the hotel in Holland will be sold next Wednesday at auction at 10 o'clock a. m.

D. J. Mahoney and J. F. Hannifin have been drawn as jurors for the coming term of the criminal court at Springfield.

The Lend-a-Hand society of the Congregational church cleared about $40 from its sale of Christmas articles last Friday evening.

J. J. Conway has taken the agency for the Ware Steam Laundry, with an office at McBride's barber shop, at the east end of the opera house.

Edward Carey has purchased of J. H. Gamwell the farm near the reservoir of the Palmer Water Co., for some time occupied by Mr. Carey.

The Quaboag Historical Society will meet again next Friday evening, when Rev. F. E. Jenkins will read a paper on the settlement of Florida and Louisiana.

The grippe has crippled the working force in C. A. Brown & Co's. store this week, William Higgins and Fred Harrison both being confined to the house.

The teachers in the grammar school building presented their scholars with bags of candy at the close of school to-day, 32 pounds being necessary to go around.

The insurance on the burned laundry of Joseph Barrett has been adjusted by the Fitch agency, $600 being paid on the building and $560 on the machinery.

Unless a sudden and prolonged thaw sets in the ice crop bids fair to be a plentiful one this season. The ice is now about eight inches thick and of good quality.

Mrs. Michael Healey was severely burned about the face and neck Monday morning while removing the cover from a wash boiler. She was attended by Dr. Holbrook.

The large bay horse which has drawn the delivery wagon for the express companies for the past 15 years has gone lame and will be sent to Boston, another animal being sent to take his place.

Rufus Flynt, Nelson Whiton and James Atwood captured a handsome string of pickerel through the ice Tuesday. There were 10, ranging from one to four pounds each, the whole tipping the scales at 20 pounds.

The Tuesday evening class in the parlors of the Congregational church next week will have an interesting study of the Twelve Apostles. Those not regular members of the class are invited to this special study.

Miss Mary Shea has closed her millinery rooms in Commercial block and will return to her home in Lee, where she has moved her stock. She thinks of locating next season in some town nearer home if an oportunity is afforded.

Miss Lizzie Brosnahan entertained a party of young friends at the home of her aunt, Mrs. J. T. Denning, on Maple street, Monday evening, the occasion being her sixteenth birthday. Music, games and a candy pull helped to pass away the hours.

Braman B. Adams, who was station agent for the Boston and Albany road at this place for a number of years, then going to East Brookfield in the same capacity, serving 26 years in all, died at the home of his son-in-law, F. E. Pettingill, at Milford Tuesday at the age of 72.

There was a good exhibition of horseflesh and trotting on Main street Monday afternoon, H. P. Holden driving "Roscoe," who is credited with an exhibition mile in 2.19½, Thomas Blanchard driving "Ironwood," 2.32½, and Nelson Whiton handling A. T. Wing's well-known "Dick."

The selectmen have this week received from the officials of the New England Telephone and Telegraph Co. a letter tendering the free use of any lines of the company in summoning aid from any other town or city in case of a fire with which the local company is unable to cope.

The Central Vermont road offers round-trip tickets for the holidays between any points on its system at a fare and a third. The Christmas tickets will be good going December 23, 24 and 25, and the New Year's tickets December 30 and 31, inclusive, all good for the return trip until January 3, inclusive.

A horse belonging to W. H. Williams became frightened while hitched at the Boston and Albany freight house Monday afternoon and pulling away ran along the track toward the station, where it was stopped by waving a lantern in its face. The buggy to which the animal was attached was badly wrecked.

All the schools in town closed this afternoon, to commence again Tuesday, January 2d, and continue until March 16th, when the high school will have a vacation until March 26th and the others until April 9th. The graded schools close June 15th for the summer vacation, the high school closing the 29th.

A couple of young fellows appropriated several articles from the counters of LeGro & Lynde's store Wednesday evening with the intention of making themselves a Christmas present, and would have got off undiscovered if one had not dropped a pipe just as he was going out the door. Neither belong in this place.

Last Friday evening and Saturday were as disagreeable as pedestrians often find. The rain of Friday afternoon froze as fast as it fell, and the sidewalks were covered with a coating as smooth as glass. Saturday it rained, taking off the snow which had fallen and leaving smooth ice underneath, making locomotion painfully difficult.

All members of the Sunday school and congregation of the Congregational church are urged to make a special effort to be present at Sunday school next Sunday morning. In addition to illustrations of the lesson the school will pay a stereoptican visit to the churches of the Annunciation and of the Nativity—fifteen views having been ordered.

The young people—and some who were not so young in years, though still youthful in feeling—had great sport coasting on Thorndike street Monday afternoon and evening. The thaw of the day before had left the roadway covered with glare ice, and at one side, where the teams had not cut it up, the sleds fairly hummed. The slide was a long one, from the top of the hill to Main street.

J. S. Barrett has decided not to rebuild his burned laundry on Maple street, and has sold the business to George Callahan, who has rented a building on the east end of Park street, nearly opposite the Boston and Albany freight house, and will do his best to retain Mr. Barrett's customers. He will not run a steam laundry at present, but if the business should prove successful will put in the machinery later.

Congressman Gillett writes that the agricultural department has put at his disposal a quantity of garden seeds which he wishes to distribute through the district to those who would care most for them, and so until the supply is exhausted he will be glad to send a package to any citizen who will mail to him his name and address. Direct to Frederick H. Gillett, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Chief Engineer Hitchcock has had considerable trouble of late caused by the wires of the electric light, telephone and telegraph companies being crossed with the wires of the fire alarm system. Last Saturday night about 10 o'clock a spring on the striker in the Universalist church tower was burned off by a cross with an electric light wire. The spring had to be replaced while the lighting current was on the wire, which makes it at times a difficult matter to handle the wires.

J. J. Conway is arranging for a concert and ball in the opera house on the evening of Monday, January 1st. Messenger's orchestra of Warren will furnish the music. The floor will be managed by Thomas Rooney, assisted by J. Sullivan, J. Cashman and J. F. O'Leary. Supper will be served during the intermission. Tickets admitting to both concert and ball can be had for $1, or concert tickets for 25 cents. Prizes will be given to the most tastefully dressed lady and to the homeliest man.

With Bates Bros.' new Humpty Dumpty, which will appear at the opera house tomorrow evening, is Grimaldi Malcom, said to be the world's greatest clown. He has appeared in nearly every city in the world, but has been in this country only about one year. His work on the stilts is wonderful, and in the character of Humpty Dumpty he has no equal on earth, and is a whole show in himself. The show promises to be one of the best here this season. The clown band will parade at noon, with the comic trick donkey Carmancita and the educated goats.

The Christian Endeavor society of the Congregational church made choice of the committees last Sunday evening, and the completed list is: President, A. W. Thayer; vice president, Miss Anna Fisherdick; secretary and treasurer, Miss Charlotte Bray; prayer meeting committee, Mrs. J. W. Brainerd, Dr. G. H. Wilkins, Miss Flora Studley, Harold Shaw; lookout, F. B. Pope, Miss Bessie Moore, Miss Mabel Sedgwick, Robert Stebbins; missionary, Miss Julia Allen, Mrs. L. E. Chandler, Miss Blanche Ramsden, Miss Bertha Hastings; temperance, Miss Carrie Roper, L. E. Chandler, Miss Effie Shaw, Edwin S. Gardner, Miss Anna Fisherdick; music, Mrs. A. W. Thayer, Miss Grace Huntley, Miss Abbie Wallis; social, Mrs. B. P. Morse, L. E. Moore, Miss Anna Shaw, Miss Phebe Hastings.

These officers of Revere Chapter of the order of the Eastern Star were elected and installed at the meeting Wednesday evening: W. M., Helen L. Robinson; W. P., Charles E. Fuller; A. M., Lydia M. Grosvenor; S., D. S. Davis; T., Mary A. Royce; C., E. Janie Weld; A. C., Jennie Brainerd. The following appointments were made: A., Georgia A. Fuller; R., Anna C. Moore; E., Arabelle K. Ruggles; M., Carrie W. Brown; E., Jennie S. Carpenter; W., Catherine H. Shumway; S., Silas W. Shumway; C., Annie L. Frost; O., Faunie W. Brown. The chapter has been working under a dispensation, but received its charter Wednesday evening, and made the occasion a pleasant one. The grand officers were present, also delegations from the chapters at Warren and Springfield. W. A. Barnes was chairman of the committee on entertainment, and served a tempting collation after the work. Speeches by various members of the order followed.

Miss Lizzie Goldthwaite of Danvers, the organizer for the Young People's Christian Union in this state, has been in town the past week in the interest of her work. At St. Paul's Unieersalist church she spoke to a large audience Sunday morning on "The National Young People's Work in the Universalist Church—Its Past, Present, and Future." She attended the young people's service at 6 o'clock, and offered helpful suggestions about conducting such services. In the evening she delivered a fine address on "The State Work of the Universalist Union." Monday evening Miss Goldthwaite was tentered a reception in the ladies' parlor. Tuesday evening she discussed "The Young People's Work in Palmer," and Thursday evening "The Relation of the Parish to the Y. P. C. U." During her stay here Miss Goldthwaite has called at the homes of the young people connected with the Universalist church, and has also visited Springfield, Warren and Monson to arrange for work in these places. Miss Goldthwaite has been entertained at the Universalist parsonage.

State Primary School Notes.

Mr. Davis is able to be at work again.

Mr. Keith has recovered from a severe attack of the grippe.

Dr. Woodbridge, state inspector of institutions, visited the school Wednesday.

Sunday morning the usual chapel services will be dispensed with, and the children will attend the several churches in Palmer. In the evening there will be a Christmas concert.

Christmas day will no doubt be the happiest of the year for the children. A turkey dinner will be served, 220 pounds of turkey having been secured for that purpose. Several boxes of oranges and a barrel of candy were also seen being deposited in the office. In the afternoon there will be a Christmas tree, and Santa Claus will appear in due form to present each boy and girl with a Christmas present.

District Court.

On Saturday civil entries were made by Ella A. Brown & Co. against P. E. Bard in action of contract, and by Lewis L. Clark against Calvin W. Johnson in action of tort. The latter suit arises from a seizure of liquors and arrest made last summer by Johnson. Clark had a load of beer which he was taking to Monson when arrested by Johnson. It was proved Clark bought the stuff, and it was returned by order of the court. He now seeks to recover $1000 as recompense for the arrest and imprisonment.

This morning Daniel Sullivan of Ware was arraigned for larcency of two pipes and a shaving brush from the store of LeGro & Lynde Wednesday evening. Sullivan was located at Ware yesterday, and was taken this morning by Deputy Sheriff Studley. He entered a plea of not guilty, but on hearing the evidence the court ordered a committal to the state reformatory at Concord without date. He gave his age as 23 years. Sullivan was before the court in 1891 for larcency of clothing from a roommate in Wales, for which the superior court imposed a sentence of one year.

BONDSVILLE.

C. S. O'Regan of Tufts is home for the holidays.

Miss Maggie Leary spent Sunday with friends in Ware.

Miss Ora Parent is home from Smith College for Christmas.

Mrs. Arthur Jenks is visiting friends at Pansy Park this week.

Dennis Sullivan of Amherst College is home for the holidays.

Miss Edith Hobson spent last week with her aunt in Springfield.

C. L. Holden's store wears a gala day appearance with its holiday goods.

O. A. Parent has a fine assortment of Christmas goods, both useful and ornamental.

Mrs. Ida Pasco, who has been visiting in Blanchville, Ct., the last few months, has returned.

John Mansfield, who had expected a position in Holyoke, has given it up and gone back to work for the Boston Duck Co.

Mrs. Michael Shea, who lives just over the river, stepped out of doors Tuesday night and fell on the ice and was taken up dead.

Mrs. John Dunn and children, who have been spending a week with Mrs. Dunn's sister in Smithville, returned home Monday.

Mrs. Chester Lorrimer of Northampton, who has been visiting Mrs. H. D. Shaw the last two weeks, returned to her home Monday.

Miss Sophia Thompson of Worcester came Tuesday night to visit her mother and her aunt, Mrs. Richard Russell, and will stop with her aunt while here.

Mrs. Henry Morgan has a good assortment of confectionery and fancy goods. A large doll will be given after January 1st to the holder of the lucky ticket, every purchaser of 15 cents worth of goods to receive a ticket.

Patrick Fitzgerald, Clark & Hastings's butcher of this place, thinks that the reporter for a Springfield daily got things rather mixed when he reported that his horse had run away and smashed the cart, besides injuring Mr. Fitzgerald quite badly. The horse did not run, and so he was not hurt.

THREE RIVERS.

Mrs. A. W. Warriner has been quite ill with the grippe this week.

Miss Annie Crane is convalescent after a severe attack of the grippe.

Miss Casher of Sterling Junction is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Needham.

Al Roberts of Springfield spent a few days in town this week, visiting friends.

Miss Jennie Herren has been quite ill with the grippe for several days past.

A number of young people are planning for a sleighride on New Year's evening.

Miss Jennie Twiss of Roxbury is expected to spend Christmas with her people here.

Several persons from here attended the temperance meeting at Thorndike Monday evening.

Miss Prentiss of the state primary school was the guest of Mrs. F. A. Ruggles Wednesday.

Mr. Cushman of Agawam has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Newell during this week.

Mrs. Gannan of Saco, Me., is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. W. Gannan, intending to spend a few weeks here.

It is said that Mr. Bengle, who recently opened a shoe shop here, is about to close up his business and leave town.

A number of the grammar school scholars are suffering from severe colds, which considerably lessens the daily attendance.

F. A. Ruggles has taken the contract to place a new baptistry in the auditorium of the Baptist church. Arrangements are being made to hold the Sunday evening meetings in the upper room.

The literary society has made arrangements for a debate, to be held on Jan. 8th, the subject being: "Resolved, that environment has more influence than heredity in forming character."

Richard Twiss, the future postmaster, has received his commission, and will assume control of the office the first of January. The new quarters are being pushed forward by Shaw Brothers, and will be in readiness for the equipments early next week.

One young lady resident here has had a great desire to become a skater since such delightful evenings for indulging in the pastime have arrived. Accordingly, she invested in a pair of those steels which make so precarious a support for the uninitiated, and essayed to acquaint herself with them in her boudoir, but owing to the numerous palestral performances the carpet, to her chagrin, is somewhat injured in fibre.

The Sunday school of the Union Evangelical church held its annual business meeting on Tuesday evening, and unanimously elected its former officers, with the addition of Mrs. Hillman as assistant secetary, and Philip Story as assistant librarian. The classes have as usual planned to hold Christmas-tree exercises in the church on Christmas evening, and committees have been appointed to attend to the details of the occasion.

THORNDIKE.

Miss Amanda Smith of Amherst is visiting friends here for a few days.

Miss Ella Watson has returned from her visit with friends in Southbridge.

A party from this place enjoyed a pleasant sleighride to Enfield during the week.

Jeremiah Oakley of Easthampton has been in town for a few days during the week.

The Kickapoo Indian Medicine Co. is to be in town for a few weeks in the near future.

During the past week many people have been confined to their homes with the grippe.

Agent C. H. Hobbs is out again after being confined to his home with the grippe for a few days.

Mrs. Henry J. Dill is visiting her daughter in Boston, and will remain until after Christmas.

Some good strings of pickerel have been caught at Forest Lake during the past week by parties from this place.

Mrs. Emma Murdock is to move into the house recently occupied by Mrs. William Griffith, on Commercial street.

Those from this place who saw "Uncle Hiram" at the opera house on Friday evening were well pleased with the performance.

A person interested in the Keeley cure for inebriates was in town recently looking up subjects for treatment, but did not secure any.

Mr. Jacobs of Holyoke was in town on Tuesday, looking over the ground for a bakery, and it is possible he may establish one here.

Skating is the favorite pastime now it seems, judging from the number seen near the No. 1 mill dam enjoying the sport these fine moonlight nights.

The temperance rally at the Congregational church on Monday evening was largely attended, and much interest was taken in the movement, which it is hoped will prove fruitful.

The forty hours devotion, together with the special exercises at St. Mary's church during the past week, were attended by several hundred. Several out-of-town clergymen were present, including Rev. Father Donoghue of Palmer and Rev. Father Chalupka, a Polish priest of Chicopee. Special masses were celebrated on Tuesday morning at 5 and 8 respectively, which were largely attended.

The following programme of music has been arranged by Organist J. F. Luman of the Catholic church for the 11 o'clock service Christmas day:

Morning Hymn. "Adeste Fidelis".....Orrin
Asperges Me.....Arr. by J. F. Luman
Kyrie.....Millard
Gloria.....Millard
Credo.....Bordeuse
Offertory. (Mixed Quintette) "Awake My Soul".....Weigand
Sanctus and Benedictus.....Bordeuse
Agnus Dei.....Millard
Domine Salvam.....Millard

Vespers will be celebrated at 3 o'clock, with benediction of the blessed sacrament. The following singers will make up the choir: Misses Murphy, Flynn, O'Connor, Leary, Loftus, Moran, Holden, and Messrs. Molloy and Luman.

Another Runaway.

Another runaway, the fifth within three months, occurred on Wednesday evening about 7.30 on Main street, all seeming to take place in or about the same locality. This one of Wednesday evening was caused by the breaking of one of the shafts, letting it onto the horse's feet, which ran and threw the occupant of the sleigh out, then continued quite a distance. The animal was captured after jumping over a five-foot rail. No one was injured, which was very fortunate. The sleigh was somewhat demolished.

Measles are prevalent.

The Woman's Relief Corps meets to-night.

The schools closed this afternoon for a vacation until Jan. 2.

R. H. Fuller leaves to-morrow to spend the winter in Boston.

J. S. R. Coy will give an organ recital some time in January.

Rev. William H. Marble preached at Wales Tuesday evening.

H. C. Norcross, who has been ill for several weeks, is somewhat better.

Eben Thresher has gone to South Framingham to stay for the winter.

The Ladies' Whist Club met with Mrs. Gifford Tuesday afternoon.

Henry G. Rogers killed a hog Wednesday which weighed 416 pounds.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Day of Jacksonville, Ill., are guests of H. C. Day.

E. J. Osborne has accepted a position with George A. Harvey, contractor.

Harry Needham has been spending a few days with Carl Blair at Warren.

J. Henry Robbins of New Haven visited friends here Thursday and Friday.

Miss Louise Morris spent the first part of the week with friends in Springfield.

Mr. and Mrs. William S. Nason are rejoicing in the birth of a son last Saturday.

Christmas tree and entertainment next Monday evening at the Universalist church.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Dorsett rejoice over the arrival of a daughter, born to them last week.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society met Monday evening with Mrs. Lucinda H. White.

A priest from Holy Cross College, Worcester, will assist at St. Patrick's church next Sunday.

The Methodist Sunday school will have an entertainment and Christmas tree Monday evening.

Miss Mary McDonald of Boston is spending her winter vacation with her parents at the quarry.

It is reported that Selectman Foskett has purchased the bay trotter "Patchen Wilkes," with a record of 2 20¾.

The Dorcas society of the Congregational church met with Mrs. Carlos M. Gage Wednesday afternoon.

Quantities of fruit have been sold in town for the holidays, Pendergast alone disposing of about 50 boxes of oranges.

Owing to sickness in the family of Rev. Mr. Makepeace of Springfield, he did not exchange last Sunday with Rev. Mr. Hatch.

The railroad station was lighted by electricity this afternoon for the first time, and the improvement is greatly appreciated.

Miss Carrie L. Chapin returned Thursday from Easthampton, where she has been visiting Miss Margie Clifford since Saturday.

Miss Delia Bailey, who has been the guest of Mrs. L. C. Flynt, left last week for Savannah, Ga., where she is to spend the winter.

In spite of the hard times many of our merchants have a goodly array of holiday goods, which they advertise at prices to suit the times.

Rev. T. J. Conaty, D.D., of Worcester, will lecture next Thursday evening at the town hall on "American Citizenship," for the benefit of the poor.

Judge Newton has donated to Flynt Park a very rare piece of wood, taken from a ship from England which arrived in this country in 1744.

Mrs. F. P. Bradway and son of Willimantic are at Mrs. M. J. Bradway's for a stay until after Christmas. Mr. Bradway is expected to-morrow night.

Mrs. Harriet Fenton was called to Willimantic the latter part of last week on account of the illness of her daughter, Mrs. Fernando Strong.

Many from here attended the auction at Mansfield of the live stock of the Storrs Agricultural College. Much of the stock will be brought here.

W. S. Murphy's team collided with that of Timothy Foley at the railroad station yesterday noon, and a wheel on the former was smashed. No one was hurt.

Reynolds's "new" mill is now running full time, but the "old" mill still bears on its side a notice, dated Aug. 26, that the machinery is stopped indefinitely.

A letter box was placed on the inside of the post office door yesterday, with an opening through the door, so that letters can be dropped in after the office is closed.

The Ladies' Society of the Universalist church had a chicken pie supper Wednesday evening, followed by a pleasing entertainment, consisting of shadow pantomimes.

Mrs. Mary Cutler, formerly of Stafford, died of pneumonia last Saturday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. F. E. Fiske, in Westfield. She was 83 years of age. The burial was at Brimfield.

C. M. Gage and G. H. Fosket, the commissioners appointed in the insolvent estate of the late Gideon S. Moore, have performed the duties required of them and are ready to report to the court.

The Universalist Sunday school will give the "Glory in the Highest" concert Sunday evening. One of the pleasing features of the concert will be the Cathedral March on the organ, with orchestra accompaniment.

The new school house on State street is rapidly approaching completion, the inside finish and the floor now being put in. It is hoped to have the building ready for use at the beginning of the next term, Jan. 2.

Monson is fortunate in having few extra calls for assistance from the poor. The overseers are helping only three families beside the regular cases, and the necessity to aid one of these was caused by scarlet fever.

Marcus Keep Post, G. A. R., has elected these officers: C., George M. Severy; S. V. C., Henry O. Nelson; J. V. C., Henry E. Bugbee; S., W. J. Ricketts; O. D., Lowell Wilcox; C., Wilbur M. Fay; O. G., Thomas J. Mills.

George L. Keeney is located for the present in the old Heimann & Lichten boarding house, with a line of holiday goods, papers and drugs. He is building a store on the site of the burned engine house, just south of Central Block.

There has been some lively trotting on Main street this week. Yesterday afternoon the brushes were between horses owned by G. C. Flynt, Ralph Clifford and Fred Cushman, and a Palmer horse driven by Nelson Whiton.

The dormitory connected with the academy has paid all expenses from the receipts during the past term, for the first time in its history. The students report having fared well, even better than previously, which speaks well for Principal Burke.

About the usual proportion of the taxes has been paid over to the town treasurer by the collector, but the balance, which should be coming along now, is hard to get. The annual meeting next spring will see an unusually large per cent of the taxes uncollected.

At the Congregational church next Sunday Rev. Mr. Hatch will preach on "The Savior Come." In the evening the Sunday school will give a concert, which is in preparation by the young ladies. Monday evening there will be a Christmas tree, and one at Silver street Tuesday evening.

John Burgess' Weeks, monologist, of the Christian Association Bureau of Boston, will appear at the Universalist church January 2d in "Still Waters Run Deep." Mr. Weeks impersonates the eight characters in the drama, and will also read several pieces. His entertainment comes well recommended.

The ordination to the priesthood of Rev. Philip J. Lee, brother of Rev. John F. Lee, will take place at St. Mary's Seminary, Baltimore, Md., to-morrow morning. Father Lee left here this morning, and with his mother will attend the ceremony. The young priest will assist at St. Patrick's church next Sunday.

W. N. Flynt & Sons have given some very interesting piano concerts during the week at their large and spacious store. The artists, who have done much credit to themselves as well as the instrument, are Miss Dalton, Miss Rude and Miss Gallivan, and Mr. Joseph Chandler, a young man who bids fair to be one of our leading players. Mr. Frederick Booth, lately of Providence, who is employed by Heimann & Litchten, showed his skill at playing two evenings. He ranks among the first at Providence, and those who heard him here could easily realize it.

In spite of the hard times Monson has made a good showing in the building line, as the following will show: Bank block, $30,000; State street school house, $4000; S. F. Cushman, Jr., remodeling, $2500; W. B. Grout, repairs, $500; Marvin Bradway, addition, $600; Charles Stacy, remodeling, $1000; J. Hannifin, addition, $200; W. N. On the other hand, however, the town has suffered a considerable loss by fire, in the burning of the mill at North Monson and the Central block on Main street.

Frederick Fay.

The following obituary of the late Frederick Fay of Monson is taken from the November number of the American Hatter of New York:—

The news of the sudden death of Frederick Fay was a painful surprise to the hat trade, as he had been around in apparently his usual health but a very few days before. He was taken sick on Saturday, Nov. 11th, with what proved to be appendicitis, and was taken to Roosevelt Hospital for an operation, which offered but one chance in a hundred of being successful. It was the only chance, however, and Mr. Fay concluded to take it. The operation was performed, but the patient never rallied, and died on the following Tuesday. The funeral services were held at Monson, Mass., on Thursday, the 16th inst.

Mr. Fay was born in Monson, Mass., and was the son of Mr. Rufus F. Fay, of the firm of Merrick, Fay & Co., straw goods manufacturers.

From early boyhood he had been connected in some capacity with the straw hat trade, and for the past five years was a valued and trusted employe of the firm of Vanderhoef & Co. He had so endeared himself to the firm and its customers by his gentle and courteous manner, and by his strict fidelity to their interests, that the news of his death came to them in the nature of a personal bereavement.

Among his comrades as a salesman he was held in the higest esteem, and in response to an invitation a very large number of his old associates gathered at 13 Astor place on Thursday, November 16th, to take suitable action expressive of their regard. The meeting was organized by the selection of Mr. S. B. Hall as chairman and L. D. Gallison as secretary. A committee on resolutions was appointed by the chair, who presented the following:

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Supreme Ruler of all things, in His wisdom, to remove from us by sudden death, our friend and companion, Frederick Fay. We meet to give expression to our sorrow and profound respect; therefore be it

Resolved: That being daily associated with him, we came to know him intimately, and we hereby bear witness to his genial character, sterling integrity and honesty of purpose under all circumstances, and to follow his example would be to seek the highest type attainable among men.

Resolved: That we tender to his bereaved family the only consolation in our power, that of deep sympathy in their bereavement, recommending them to God, who alone can heal their wounds.

Resolved: That a copy of these resolutions be suitably engrossed and presented to the family as a memorial of our regard.

Mr. J. B. Muir gave a short account of Mr. Fay's illness and death, and paid a high tribute to his late friend. He spoke in the warmest manner of his manly character, his honesty of purpose and his pure and disinterested friendship.

Mr. Hall stated that the firm of Vanderhoef & Co. felt that they had sustained a great loss. During the five years that Mr. Fay had been connected with them his good qualities had constantly developed. He had shown great ability, purity of intention, entire integrity, and great ambition. He was a thorough gentleman and clearly expressed it in his daily life, and greatly endeared himself to all with whom he came in contact. His life as a whole was one to be emulated. He had gone to his long rest, the road all must go, but he had not lived in vain.

Mr. Muir stated that a suitable floral emblem had been forwarded to Monson as a token from his late associates. This action was endorsed by those present at the meeting, and a motion passed to have the resolutions suitably engrossed and presented to the family.

WILBRAHAM.

Miss Adelaide N. Colburn, who has been assistant in the musical department of Wesleyan Academy, has resigned and will go to her home in New Hampshire. ### BELCHERTOWN.

W. E. Bridgman has been drawn as grand juror, and Eugene Randall and Fred B. Purdy as traverse jurors.

A stereopticon exhibition of views of Chicago and the World's Fair will be given in the town hall this evening.

B. Butler will close his house and go to Leicester, where he has leased the Leicester House, a hotel with 75 rooms.

Mason Sanford, who has been ill with pneumonia, is suffering from a relapse, and Mrs. Sanford is ill with the grippe.

It is understood that Rev. F. F. Thayer will finish his labors with the Baptist church with the last Sunday in the year, and go to Holyoke.

Apropos of the water supply question it is said that W. Orlando offers to lay the pipes from Pratt's Mills to the town for $10,000, or to furnish water for a guarantee of 90 takers, which it is said have been secured.

Mrs. Emily Stebbins Bartlett, 79, widow of the late Cyrus Bartlett, died Sunday at the home of her sister, Mrs. Lyman Sabin, where she was visiting, having been sick only two hours. She had been a member of the Congregational church since 1831. She leaves one son, Addison Bartlett, and one sister besides Mrs. Sabin, Mrs. Mather of Hartford, Ct.

Dr. G. F. Thompson has recently become possessed of about 80 volumes of the library of Esquire Mark Doolittle, a prominent resident of Belchertown some years ago. He was a man of much intellectual ability, and gave to the town a work entitled Doolittle Sketches, containing a sketch of the town's history and a history of the Congregational church.

At the meeting of the Grange Tuesday evening these officers were elected: M., H. C. West; O., E. A. Randall; L., G. L. Kent; S., G. C. Allen; A. S., C. R. Dunbar; C., P. T. Slauter; S., Mrs. Myron Ward; T., Myron Ward; G. K., Edward Kent; Ceres, Estella Shumway; Flora, Alice Smith; Pomona, Luella Hawks; L. A. S., Mrs. E. A. Randall; E. C., F. L. Stebbins; O., Miss Lucy Sherman; C., David Ward.

WARREN.

J. W. Chadsey and family spent last Sabbath in New York.

The Tuesday Club met with Mrs. Demond Tuesday afternoon.

The public schools closed to-day for a vacation of two weeks.

Rev. D. J. McGillicuddy of Westfield has taken the place of Father Madden.

Mr. Spencer is dangerously ill at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Curtis, on Elm street.

Mr. and Mrs. Holbrook have returned to town, and Mr. Holbrook has taken his former position in the Knowles pump works.

Dr. J. W. Hastings and Dr. Robert Hastings attended the medical meeting at West Brookfield Wednesday afternoon.

The children will have a supper at the Congregational chapel Friday night, after which the Christmas presents will be distributed to the Sabbath school scholars.

Christmas services will be held in the different churches next Sabbath, and Saturday evening the Universalists give an entertainment, consisting of Christmas trees, etc.

A very pleasing entertainment, consisting of readings from Kate Wiggin's "The Bird's Christmas Carol," illustrated by thirteen tableaux, was given by the young ladies' mission circle at the Congregational chapel Tuesday night.

Dr. Robert W. Hastings, who has just completed an eighteen months' service at the Boston City Hospital as home officer, is spending a few days in town. He will return to the hospital another year as executive assistant.

The young people will give an entertainment in the town hall next Tuesday night, entitled "The Darky's Golden Wedding." The entertainment is under the auspices of the King's Daughters, and promises to be very amusing. The proceeds will be donated to the Warren Relief Fund.

The bell for the new mill of Sayles & Jenks was placed in position Tuesday by Blake Bros. of Boston. It weighs 1900 pounds, and is inscribed to the memory of Mrs. Fannie Jane Sayles, wife of A. L. Sayles, who died in January. Mrs. W. A. Sayles was present when the bell was hung, and gave the first pull on the rope.

A town meeting has been called for the 30th in the town hall, to consider the question of adopting the McTammany voting machine. A town by-law relative to the clearing of snow from the sidewalks will be presented for adoption, and the voters will be asked to instruct the selectmen to procure a piece of land owned by Dr. J. W. Hastings, also to vote on the extension of Pleasant street in West Warren as laid out by the selectmen.

Two more of the men who burglarized the store of J. M. Drake last week were caught at Willimantic, Ct., last Friday night. They gave their names as James E. Francis and Frank Dillon, and applied at the police station for lodgings. They were identified as the parties wanted in Warren, and Deputy Sheriff Putnam notified. He went to Willimantic and identified the clothing they wore as taken from the store of Mr. Drake, also a knife found in Dillon's pocket. The men are about 35 years old. Both agreed to come to Massachusetts without requisition papers, and Saturday were bound over in the sum of $1000 each by Judge Bush of West Brookfield, and committed in default. Francis lived in Warren about three years ago and worked in the pump shop.

WARE.

All the schools in town will have a two weeks' Christmas vacation.

Mrs. Harty's lunch room has been reopened this week, after being closed some time for painting and other renovations.

Santa Claus is expected to come down the chimney and out of the fireplace at the Unitarian church on Monday evening, laden with good things for the children.

C. P. Nelson claims a new invention for making the leather for tapping boots and shoes impervious to water, and making them last much longer than leather not so prepared.

There is to be a Christmas tree at the Hardwick mission school house Monday evening, where services and Sunday school have been supported during the summer by the East Congregational church.

It is reported that 144 persons attended the World's Fair from Ware. If they were to hold a social, as has been done in some places, there are few towns of this size which would turn out so large a number.

The Davis Insurance Agency is distributing by far the most elegant calendars of any one in this vicinity, this business having grown to such proportions that the manager can afford what would bankrupt a smaller firm.

C. W. Eddy is doing some fine interior photographing. He has just made a 16 by 20 plate of the grocery department of C. Hitchcock & Co's. store. What would please an absent one more than a photograph of the familiar home rooms?

At the probate court Saturday William S. Hyde was appointed administrator of the estate of J. A. Cummings; Joseph H. Cummings, a son, filed a notice of appeal from the appointment, and Henry C. Davis was appointed special administrator pending the appeal.

The Foresters at their meeting Tuesday evening elected these officers for the ensuing year: C. R., W. F. Godfrey; S. C. R., A. M. Canavan; F. S., T. J. Nelligan; T., P. D. Sullivan; R. S., F. H. Shea; S. B., C. Boyle; J. B., W. D. Bradley; S. W., F. H. Murray; J. W., F. O'Leary; J. P. C. R., M. J. Reilly.

Christmas will be observed at the East Congregational church by a sermon appropriate to the occasion, and special music. At 6 o'clock Monday evening there will be exercises by the Sunday school, consisting of singing and recitations, and the distribution of presents from the Christmas tree. All are cordially invited.

Mrs. Silas Billings, aged 74 years, died Sunday, Dec. 7. She was born at Ware Center, in the house now owned by Ivory Harwood. Her father, Thomas Snell, Sr., built the house. He was married twice and was the father of twenty children. Mrs. Billings was the seventeenth and last child by his first wife.

The programme of the meeting of the Massachusetts Sunday School Association, and the International Sunday School Lesson committee, held in Boston Dec. 6, has in connection with their own programme a copy of that used at the district convention held at Ware Nov. 23, as being a model programme and showing the kind of work being done by the association in all parts of the state.

The following officers of Nenameseck council, American Legion of Honor, were elected Monday evening: Commander, W. C. Carrick; vice commander, W. B. Eldy; orator, E. W. Barney; secretary, Elbridge Hathaway; treasurer, W. O. Barrett: guide, William A. Hathaway; warden, F. E. Fearigo; sentry, R. A. Sullivan; representative, W. C. Carrick; alternate, Elbridge Hathaway; auditing committee, George E. Preston, Dr. G. F. A. Spencer, Fred E. Marsh; trustees, W. C. Carrick, Elbridge Hathaway, W. O. Barrett; collector and chaplain to be appointed.

The community was greatly surprised and pained to learn of the death of Miss Bessie Ainsworth, aged 24 years, only child of Dr. and Mrs. D. W. Ainsworth, which occurred Tuesday afternoon. She had been troubled with heart disease for some time, but had been out and about the house, not being considered dangerously ill until a short time before her death. She was well known in town and was greatly beloved by all who had made her acquaintance. Miss Ainsworth was a member of the East Congregational church, and an active member of the Christian Endeavor society, her voice being almost always heard in the meetings. Her name was on the programme for this month to lead the meeting next Sunday, with the topic "Christmas Service; what can we give to Christ?"

INSURANCE!

We wish to call attention of the people of Monson and vicinity to our superior facilities for writing their insurance, either

Fire, Life or Accident.

If you seek protection, you want to get protection. We represent none but time-tried and fire-tested companies, the oldest and best.

See our list: Ætna, Hartford, Phœnix, Continental and National of Hartford; Home, Niagara, Phœnix, Continental and American of New York; Insurance Co. of North America and Pennsylvania Fire of Philadelphia; Springfield and Marine of Springfield; Guardian of London and Royal of Liverpool. In combined capital and assets we are the largest agency in Western Mass. Last year we wrote over $1,000,000 fire insurance, and during the past four years we have paid the people of Monson over $125,000, and all losses have been adjusted promptly and equitably.

We are authorized agents for all of our companies, write our own policies, and can bind your insurance at any moment. We can secure a policy in any Life Insurance Co. you may wish—but make a specialty of the Connecticut Mutual of Hartford, because we believe that they give the best contract.

For Accident Insurance we can give you the Traveller's of Hartford, and they need no commendation.

Respectfully,

MORRIS & FARRINGTON, Monson.

What Five $1 Bills Accomplished.

This money was invested in five bottles of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. "I suffered for nearly ten years with constipation, jaundice and biliousness," writes Mr. D. Probert, of New Hampton, N. Y., "and the best medical treatment I could procure did me no good. A friend of mine spoke about Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, which I bought, and when I had taken three bottles I was what most people would call a well man, and two bottles more entirely cured me. What the doctors cost me hundreds of dollars in trying to do, Favorite Remedy did for five dollars." If you are inclined to constipation don't neglect yourself. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy permanently cures it.

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING,

EPPS'S COCOA

BREAKFAST—SUPPER.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided for breakfast and supper a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We can escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame." —Civil Service Gazette. Made simply with boiling water or milk. A STRANGE CASE.

How an Enemy was Foiled.

The following graphic statement will be read with intense interest: "I cannot describe the numb, creepy sensation that existed in my arms, hands and legs. I had to rub and beat those parts until they were sore, to overcome in a measure the dead feeling that had taken possession of them. In addition, I had a strange weakness in my back and around my waist, together with an indescribable 'gone' feeling in my stomach. Physicians said it was creeping paralysis, from which, according to their universal conclusion, there is no relief. Once it fastens upon a person, they say, it continues its insidious progress until it reaches a vital point and the sufferer dies. Such was my prospect. I had been doctoring a year and a half steadily, but with no particular benefit, when I saw an advertisement of Dr Miles' Restorative Nervine, procured a bottle and began using it. Marvelous as it may seem, but a few days had passed before every bit of that creepy feeling had left me, and there has not been even the slightest indication of its return. I now feel as well as I ever did, and have gained ten pounds in weight, though I had run down from 170 to 137. Four others have used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine on my recommendation, and it has been as satisfactory in their cases as in mine."—James Kane, La Rue, O.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

The Unlucky Man.

I never had a bit of luck in all my span of life.
To think, of twenty women that I'd asked to be my wife,
The only one that ever answered softly "yes" to me,
Is she I quarrel with at breakfast, dinner-time, and tea.

I never took a raffle prize, excepting once, last sping,
And that for me was really worse than if I'd lost the thing.
It was a big Newfoundland dog, a nasty, vicious brute,
Who when I tried to take him home chewed up my Sunday suit.

If I go into Wall street just to turn an honest cent,
That's just about the sum I make on fliers of extent.
I bought ten thousand B. and J., and held 'em for a year,
And when I closed the item out I'd made a nickle clear.

I'm always meeting borrowers; I've yet to meet the friend
Who has a single dollar bill on any terms to lend:
But when I go to lunch at one, I'm always sure to see
A half a dozen fellows who "will come and sit" with me.

That "sitting with me" business is a thing I'd like to try,
But when I'm ready for free lunch there's not a fellow by.
I'd like to get up even with my friends on that small score,
But don't expect to do it if I live to eighty-four.

It's all because I have no luck. By fortune I'm ignored.
The lovely dame ne'er looks at me—condition untoward.
I really think should I insure 'gainst accident, and fall
Down through an elevator shaft, I'd not be hurt at all.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Wearyin' for You.

Jes' a-wearyin' for you—
All the time a-feelin' blue;
Wishin' for you—wonderin' when
You'll be comin' home agen.
Restless, don't know what to do—
Jes' a-wearyin' for you!

Room's so lonesome with your chair
Empty by the fireplace there,
Jes' can't stand the sight of it!
Go outdoors and roam a bit;
But the woods is lonesome, too—
Jes' a wearyin' for you!

Comes the wind, with soft caress,
Like the rustlin' of your dress;
Blossoms fallin' to the ground,
Softly, like your footsteps sound;
Violets like your eyes so blue—
Jes' a-wearyin' for you!

Mornin' comes; the birds awake;
Use to sing so for your sake!
But there's sadness in the notes
That come thrillin' through their throats;
Seem to feel your absence, too—
Jes' a-wearyin' for you!

Evenin' comes; I miss you more
When the dark glooms in the door;
Seems jes' like you orter be
There to open it for me!
Latch goes tinklin'; thrills me through—
Sets me a-wearyin' for you!

Jes' a-wearyin' for you—
All the time a-feelin' blue;
Wishin' for you; wonderin' when
You'll be comin' home agen;
Restless—don't know what to do—
Jes' a-wearyin' for you!

MARRIAGE OMENS.

Since marriage became an institution there have been certain signs and superstitions clinging to its celebration through all ages and in all countries.

Even in our day we have not entirely lost sight of them, and it is doubtful if there is ever a bride who does not cherish every happy omen.

The Boston Home Journal has discovered that few people are dauntless enough to risk being married on Friday, and all have more or less respect for that old shoe which is invariably thrown after the newly-wedded pair.

Almost all brides wear during the ceremony some trifling thing borrowed from a girl friend, as a propitiatory offering, also something blue and a piece of silver in one shoe.

All brides-elect rejoice when the marriage day dawns brightly, remembering the old adage:

"Blest is the bride upon whom the sun doth shine," and all are equally certain that

"To change the name and not the letter
Is a change for the worse and not the better."

It is curious how these superstitions are handed down from generation to generation, and how impotent reason and common sense are to do away with their hold upon the human mind.

Say what we will, we are by nature, if not by education, given to superstitious cautiousness.

In the earliest times among the Jews the fourth day of the week was considered the unlucky day for maidens to wed, and the fifth for widows.

The Romans also believed that certain days were unfavorable for the performance of the marriage rite, these being the Nones and the Ides of each month, also February and May, and many of their festival days. June was considered the most propitious month for matrimony, while May was to be especially avoided, as it was supposed to be under the influence of spirits inimical to happy households. This superstition prevailed for centuries in Italy, and also is even now prevalent in some parts of England; and marriages in May are prohibited in China.

There was at one time a prejudice in England against marrying on "Innocents' day," the 28th day of December, said to commemorate Herod's massacre among the children.

It has always been thought unlucky to marry in Lent, even among people outside the established church. An old line runs,

"Marry in Lent, and you'll live to repent."
"May never was ye month of love," is older still, and another says,

"Who marries between ye sickle aad ye scythe, will never thrive."

As for days, it was at one time believed that all those who married on Tuesdays and Thursdays would be assured of happiness; but, later on, a well-known rhyme tells us;

"Monday for wea th,
Tuesday for health,
Wednesday the best day of all:
Thursday for crosses,
Friday for losses,
Saturday no luck at all."

Aside from the mere time for the ceremony, omens are almost numberless. In the Middle ages it was considered ill-luck if the bridal party, in going to the church, met a monk, a priest, a dog, a cat, a hare, or a serpent; while all would go well if a wolf, a spider, or a toad were encountered. In the south of England it is held to be unlucky for a bride to look in the glass after she is completely dressed, before she goes to the church; so a glove or some other article is put on after the last look has been taken in the mirror.

Among the Romans, signs were looked for with great care, and no marriage was celebrated without an oracle being first consulted.

And after the consultation every trivial occurrence was looked upon as an omen.

Since then every country, every community almost, has had its own particular superstitions.

In Scotland, for instance, it is considered the unhappiest of omens if a couple are disappointed in getting married on the day fixed.

In the Isle of Man no bride or groom goes to the altar without a pinch of salt in his pocket.

In Yorkshire it is considered the height of ill-luck for the person to go in at one door and out at the other before and after the ceremony, and among the various curious superstitions in many parts of England is one to the effect that a bride will be unhappy in her marriage if she does not weep on her wedding day; still another, that the newly wedded pair must be driven from the church by gray horses, to insure felicity.

HOW TO DRY WET SHOES.

When, without overshoes, you have been caught in a heavy rainstorm, perhaps you have known already what to do with your best kid boots, which have been thoroughly wet through, and which, if left to dry in the ordinary way, will be stiff, brittle, and unlovely? If not, you will be glad to learn what I heard only recently, from one whose experience is of value.

First wipe off gently with a soft cloth all surface water and mud; then, while still wet, rub well with kerosene oil, using for the purpose the furred side of Canton flannel. Set them aside till partially dry, when a second treatment with oil is advisable.

They may then be deposited in a conveniently warm place, where they will dry gradually and thoroughly. Before applying French kid dressing, give them a final rubbing with the flannel, still slightly dampened with kerosene, and your boots will be soft and flexible as new kid, and be very little affected by their bath in the rain.—Harper's Bazar.

HE DIDN'T FEEL SURE.—He was pretty well along in years and had a laugh which was as cheery as it was ingenious.

"So you want to do chores for me," said the man on whom he had called.

"'Deed I does."

"Well—I don't know. You look as if you were honest—"

"Kornel, I'll tell yer de troof 'bout dat."

"Go ahead."

"Well, yuh see, I speks I's puffickly hones', but I kain't be sho'."

"Why not?"

"Ain' had 'nuff' 'sperience. I'se wifstood watahmillions all right 'nuff, but I neber yit had no face-ter-face temptations wid chickens."—Washington Star.

OUR CIVIL WAR.

Just across the dusty country road, opposite the station, was a china tree. It stood in the corner of a zigzaz fence; its brown limbs were bare save for the great clusters of pale gold berries which they had held aloft against the blue sky. Three robins were feasting on the berries. The tree, as if by some caprice, had tossed down all its yellow leaves; the brown earth welcomed them, and there they lay shining in the sunlight, says "The Blue and Gray."

She stood beneath the tree, gowned in coarse, gray, homespun, home-dyed, the large hat shading her face. Soft hair, black as the eyes so full of splendor, a complexion like the petals of a magnolia, a face whose every feature told of birth or blood, she stood in this rough garb caused by the war.

Down the railroad she strained her eyes, shading them with one small, white hand, while the other, tight-clasped, held the letter with the precious words: "I shall be with you Monday." On the other side of the low fence amid the sassafras bushes, Mammy Dilly, black, fat and jolly, rested her arms on the top rail. "Dey be here pres'ney, honey. I mighty anxious to see my boy and Marse Hugh. I know Isham come ef Marse Hugh come; dey'll git 'em furlough togedder, dey's so constan.' Dar de train now!"

It came nearer; it stopped. Isham stepped out of the baggage car, wearing an old army cap and a gray jacket with red trimmings.

"Howdy, Isham! Howdy! Whar Marse Hugh?"

"My Gord, mammy, is dat you? Is dat Miss Marg'et yander? O, mammy, teck Miss Marg'et back to de house."

"You fool, boy! How I gwine teck Miss Marg'et back to de house when Marse Hugh comin' home?"

Men were lowering something from the baggage car; Isham saw it through a sudden rain of tears, and taking off his cap, said, with bowed head: "Marse Hugh—done—done come home—to stay, mammy—wid a bullet in his breas.'"

A gray heap lay under the china tree; a face still paled amid the yellow leaves shining in the sunlight.

JUDGE GARY AND THE JURORS.

Judge Gary has always had an especial dislike for men who try to shirk jury service on flimsy excuses, and a number of good stories are told of experiences that veniremen have had with him. A little German once tried to get out of jury service on the plea that he could not speak good English.

"You'll not have to speak any at all," said the judge.

"Well, shudge, I don't tink I make a good shuror anyhow," persisted the juror.

"Why not?"

"Well," with a motion towards the attorneys in the case, "I don't understand noddings what dose vellers say."

"Neither does anyone else. Sit down!" thundered the judge.

Another juror put in a sick excuse.

"Have you anything from your doctor to that effect?" asked the judge.

"Yes, sir," was the reply, and the doctor's certificate was handed up to him.

"That's a good doctor," said the judge.

"One of the best in the city," replied the juror.

"A very good doctor," went on the judge, not noticing what the juror had said. "He'll have you cured by next term of court beyond question. Report to me then without further summons."—Chicago Journal.

"No, sir, I cannot let you kiss me.'

"You permitted Jack Getthere to kiss you the other night."

"But that was in payment of a forfeit. Then, you know, he is my cousin: and besides he is a divinity student."

"Well, so am I a divinity student."

"You?"

"Yes; haven't I been studying you for a long time?"—New York Press.

"Thank God, She is Well!"

DANA'S SARSAPARILLA IS CHEAPER AT $1.00 PER BOTTLE THAN ANY OTHER AS A GIFT. IT CURES. THE KIND THAT CURES.

DANA SARSAPARILLA CO.:

GENTLEMEN—DANA'S SARSAPARILLA has been such a Godsend that I must let others know. For the last 20 years my wife has had very poor health, complaining of severe headaches, dizzy spells, sleeplessness, pains in back and limbs. Her blood was so poor that it would appear in carbuncles or blotches all over her body. She tried the different Sarsaparillas and was treated by Physicians in Mass., N. Y. and N. J., but found but little if any relief.

Five months ago I bought her a bottle of

DANA'S SARSAPARILLA

It helped her so much I bought three more, and it seems almost impossible to describe the change it has wrought. THE BLOTCHES HAVE DISAPPEARED, and the pains in side and limbs, no more bearing down pain. In fact, she is WELL, and THANK GOD, she is a WELL woman to-day.

Hoping this may induce others to try it, I remain, Yours respy, JOHN C. JEFFRIES.

15 Pleasant St., Worcester, Mass.

This is to certify that I sold Mr. Jeffries DANA'S SARSAPARILLA, and believe him to be an honest, truthful person, and do not believe he would make a false statement in regard to its merits. Yours respectfully,

FRANK H. TENNEY, Druggist.

Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

At Bethlehem.

Let us sing of the Babe that was born to-day
Mid the mountains of old Judea,
With only the shepherds and wandering flocks
To welcome his coming here;
But the angels chorused it through the sky,
And the stars to behold him ran,
And one in its rapture lingered nigh
To mark out the spot for man.

O sing of the Babe that was born to-day,
For the world had been wrapt in night,
And the burdened and weary had lost their way
And were groping in vain for light;
But it came, O joy! and with power to save;
It came by a manger given,
And it banished forever the gloom of the grave
And lighted the path to heaven.

Yes, sing of the Babe that was born to-day,
And earth take up the strain,
The wonderful strain of long ago,
That swept the star-lit plain.
"Glory to God," ye mountains, cry,
Till from their farthest shore
The deep-mouthed seas, send back reply,
"Glory forevermore!"

"And peace on earth." Aye! "Peace on earth"!
Above the clashing sword,
And shout, and groan, in din of death,
Still let that voice be heard.
Sing on, glad angels! Shine, O star!
Nor dare your vigil cease
Till o'er the final field of war
Shall wave the palms of peace!

O kingly head, that found no rest
Save in a manger low!
O sinless head, whereon was pressed
The world's thorn-crown of woe!
Now wearest thou thy crown of light,
And brighter stars than gem
The amethystine arch of night
Adorn that diadem.

And circling ages dim it not;
When every glittering crown
And song of earth have been forgot,
And thrones have crumbled down,
One crown shall still resplendent gleam,
One throne feel no decay,
One song—the song at Bethlehem—
Shall never die away.

—N. W. Rand, in Journal of Education.

THE DISPATCHER'S MISTAKE.

It was nine o'clock of a stifling August night, and an unusual quiet began to settle upon the train dispatchers, office at S. All the wires on both the eastern and western divisions were momentarily stilled. Dispatcher Lincoln, of the eastern division, leaned back in his chair, and, stretching out his legs, closed his eyes wearily. Poor fellow! He was sadly in need of rest. His working hours were really from 7 a. m. to 3 p. m.; but he had been got out of bed at five o'clock that morning to take the place of his colleague, Dispatcher Simpson, who ran the third trick from 11 p. m. to 7 a. m. Simpson it seems, had been taken suddenly ill along about four, and so Lincoln had been called up before his usual time. This couple of hours additional duty, however, was not worth speaking of in itself; but it so happened that about noon the third assistant had been hastily called to the bedside of his father, who was likely to die. There was no person available who was deemed responsible enough to take his place temporarily; even the dispatchers of the western division knew nothing of the eastern, and so could not be relied upon to help in the emergency. A man from several stations beyond had been officially sent for as a substitute; but he could not get to S. until the next morning. In the mean time Lincoln must "brace up" and stay the night out.

The natural weariness occasioned by his unaccustomed long hours of duty, combined with the terrible oppressiveness of the atmosphere, and the deep quiet that at intervals reigned throughout the office, were peculiarly conducive to sleep. Lincoln tried hard to fight against his drowsiness. He rose to his feet, paced briskly up and down the room, then glanced up at the clock. Only five minutes past nine! and he must stay here till eight o'clock next morning. He tried to amuse himself with the impromptu problem: Given, a man who is so sleepy he can't keep his eyes open at 9 p. m., to find how much awake he will be at one a. m. He started to propose it to his companion of the western division, in the other end of the long, narrow room, but saw that he was writing a letter, and so he went over to the window instead and looked out. The window, two stories from the street, faced away from the city and directly on to a long line of side tracks and railroad buildings, over all of which loomed a dark sky, which was just now emitting frequent flashes of heavy lightning. Then simultaneous with the first long thunderclap, were the sounds of well-known footsteps hastening along the hall outside. He turned toward the door and beheld his daughter Eunice—a tall, slender girl of some sixteen years of age—carrying a lunch basket on her arm. Her appearance denoted considerable excitement.

"Why, Eunice," cried her father, "you here? Where is Robert?"

"Oh, he went over to spend the evening with Tommy Andross, and I guess he forgot all about your lunch. But I enjoyed riding over on my bike, till the storm began to come up. It's going to be a bad one, too, father. The lightning goes straight up and down like big bolts aiming at something. Oh, do close the window, like a dear!"

Her terror at the storm would have been the source of much amusement to some, but not to her father. He understood too well her delicate, nervous organization and her marked susceptibility to outside influences. The suddenness of the flashes and thunderclaps of a thunderstorm would so unnerve the girl that she would sit trembling with eyes covered throughout.

"Where did you leave your wheel?" he asked, as he closed the window and drew over it the long curtain.

"Outside, leaning against the building: but it'll be safe, for nobody will want to try riding it in this rain," she said, laughingly.

The storm quickly arose now, and was terrible in its intensity. The dry, parched earth greedily drank up the delicious downpour until it could drink no more, directing its over-abundant supply in the country into gullies and streams, thence to the river; in the city into the sewer, and thence also to the river. For nearly an hour Eunice sat silently by her father's side in the hot room, with closed eyes, to avoid being startled by the flashes that darted frequently in through the thin curtain, while he tried vainly to lift her mind out of all thoughts of the storm. At length it appeared to die away, and the window was once more opened, letting in a little refreshing, cool, damp air; the telegraph wires were again put in working order, and the girl's spirits rose once more.

"Weren't you frightened on the way?" asked her father.

Eunice hesitated a moment, then exclaimed: "Of course I was. No wonder Robert makes fun of me. Oh, father dear, I'm such a big coward! I'm frightened at every little thing. I get thoroughly out of patience with myself. See how I act in a little thunderstorm! And I never go by Lowry's orchard on my way here but I tremble with fear that some one will spring out at me from behind the trees. And yet I can't help it. Oh, I wish I could always be calm and brave!"

"Don't fret thyself, little girl," said her father, tenderly; "that is not necessarily because you are cowardly, but because you are not as strong and well as you ought to be. But you are improving—thanks to the bicycle."

Mamma didn't like to have me come," continued Eunice. "But I wanted to see you very much; and yet I don't know why. She said she would send Robert to go home with me; but I suppose he's waiting for the clouds to roll by, as he would say."

It was quarter past ten, when one of the little sounders on the table before them began to rattle off its usual signal preparatory to delivering a message. The message was from the telegraph operator at H., and ran as follows:—

"Conductor Farley, of Extra 102, is bound east loaded with fresh beef, and wants to know if he can have ten minutes on the time of No. 3, the west bound night express, to make W."

Lincoln cast his eye down upon the train sheet, which told him at once where every train out upon the road was. Then he looked at the clock and considered.

It seemed wise to grant the request. W. was but 15 miles from H. If he did not allow Farley to use ten minutes of the express train's time, the meat train would be delayed for at least an hour; and he, as well as all other dispatchers on the line, was ordered by the superintendent to give the meat trains as much show as possible, as the road was bound by a contract to get them through in a specified time. So Lincoln sent the following official order:—

"To Conductor and Engineer Extra 102: Eastbound Extra One Hundred Two (102) has until ten-fifty (10.50) p. m. to make W. against west-bound No. Three (3).
(Signed) LINCOLN, Dispatcher."

Conductor Farley and Engineer Daniels signed the order, which the operator at H. repeated back, and Lincoln O K'd it.

In about one minute afterward the operator at H. reported that Extra 102 had arrived at 10.10 and departed at 10.15.

Eunice had stood by her father during this time watching his movements. As she now watched him listlessly jotting down on the train sheet before him the time at which the freight had left H. for the east, she cried:—

"Father, why didn't you first order the express train going west to wait?"

"Oh, that's all right," he said lightly. "The freight had orders to stop at N. anyway [N. was two stations east of W.], and I am now going to telegraph to N. to have the express leave there as usual and wait at W. for the freight." He had a short time before received notice that the express had left E. on time. So it was absolutely necessary for him to get the orders at N. before the night's express ran that station, as it was the only telegraph office open at night between that point and W., where the freight was to meet it. So he began calling the operator at N.

The freight had now left H. and started on its way to W.; the express had left E., and Lincoln was calling up the operator at N. so as to instruct him to order it to wait at W. for the freight.

Lincoln, after repeated trials, failed to raise the operator at N.

"Why, the wire's closed," he said.

His expression was one of mild surprise, not of alarm. His weary, over-worked brain failed to grasp the import of his failure to raise the operator at N. He looked in a dazed, vacant way down on the train sheet in his hand. Eunice didn't understand, either. There were two other stations between N. and W., but that their telegraph offices closed at night had not occurred to her.

Finally the western wire opened. "No. 3 passed N. on time," slowly said the sounder.

Instantaneously a wonderful change passed over Lincoln's face. It was like an unconscious man suddenly come into possession of his every faculty. In feverish haste he reached for the key of the instrument and asked the operator at N. to repeat the report. There had been no mistake.

With one loud cry of agony Lincoln sprang to his feet and rushed wildly to the door. Then he came back, vaguely realizing the uselessness of his first insane impulse to run the whole seven miles to N. and head off the express that had but twelve miles to make.

"Eunice," he cried, hoarsely, "your father is a murderer!" He sank into his chair with a white, drawn face, and broke into wild, passionate sobs. Eunice looked at him in bewilderment for one brief moment; then she saw Denslow, the western division dispatcher, standing before her, and saw at once from his expression that he understood what had happened better even than she had. She hastily spoke a few words to him, then ran hurriedly out of the room, not even stopping to get her hat.

Denslow sat by the wretched man's side. "Don't lose hope, yet," he said, soothingly. "There's a chance, you know, that the engineers will see each other's headlight in time to prevent an accident. They'll probably meet a few miles east of W., and there the track is straight. I don't see how they can very well help seeing each other's headlight."

Lincoln glanced down at his train sheet.

"I do," he said, grimly. "Say Farley steals five or ten minutes, and didn't leave till 10.20, the time the express left N.; that's a common occurrence. Then the two trains will meet on the sharp curve among the mountains a few miles west of W., without an instant's warning. If I had only telegraphed back to H. the instant I failed to arouse the office at N. then, if Farley had really stolen any time, I might have prevented the freight from starting. "Oh," he cried, starting up wildly, "can't I get a horse somewhere?"

"Too late, Lincoln." said Denslow. "It is half-past ten now. It will take ten minutes, at least, to get a horse from the nearest stable, even with no delay, which would be likely enough to happen at this time of night. That would bring it to 10.40 and four minutes later the express will pass W. There's but one thing to do: to wait and hope that Farley left at 10.15, as reported, and that the two trains will meet on the straight track near W."

A strange darkness began to pass over Lincoln's eyes. The intense excitement he had just passed through, on top of his great fatigue, had left him physically weak as a child.

"Eunice!" he called.

"She isn't here," said Denslow. "She asked me if the telegraph wire was open at W. and when I told her no, she begged me to watch over you till she come back. She must have gone in less than three minutes after you heard from N. Shouldn't wonder if she'd gone for her mother."

He was wrong. At this time, 10.32, Eunice was over two miles on her way to W. She was a good cyclist, and knew the road to W. thoroughly. She had, of course, no hope of making the other five miles in the remaining twelve minutes before the express would reach W., but she did hope with all her soul that something would prevent the express from making its usual fast time, so that she could reach W. before it had passed that station.

Although it was raining hard when she started, so that she had got wet through to the skin, the storm was now passing northward, and through the constantly widening rifts in the east gleamed a late moon, whose light shone for a long distance in the road before her. How grateful Eunice felt at the sight of the clear, bright moonlight shining on her path.

Once she slackened her speed a little to rest. Then, in imagination, she saw herself at her journey's end, and saw the train just escaping her reach. If such a thing should really happen, she would never cease to reproach herself for that moment's rest. No, she mustn't stop one instant. She would do her utmost, and then, perhaps, God in some way would help her.

The road was a good, hard country road, and the water had rolled freely off its sides. The wet surface did not tend to make her labor lighter; but there were no puddles, no mud. On—on she sped in the glorious moonlight, never stopping to rest, scarcely daring to breathe freely, lest she might be kept from going at her utmost speed. How thankful she felt that during the long summer vacation, just about to close, she had spent day after day in wheeling about the country with her brother and racing with him. How fervently she prayed that no harm might happen to herself or her machine. How bravely she toiled on, regardless of every comfort, of her life even, with her whole mind fixed on the one aim of doing her very best to save those precious lives her father's carelessness had endangered, and to save her father from a life-long misery. This was the supreme effort of this girl's life. She did not see clearly how she could accomplish her aim; but her whole soul was on fire with a determination to do her best, and she was buoyed up by a supreme faith that if she really did do her best God would in some way help her.

At last she came within two miles of W., when she breathlessly listened for sounds of either train, especially for the express, which would naturally reach the station first. She feared it had already passed, but the slight possibility that it had been delayed and she might have time to reach it caused her to make one final supreme effort, and with tightened lips and renewed determination she sped on with all her strength.

When she was within half a mile of W., she heard the approaching express whistle in the distance.

Never did she experience such a wild thrill of exulation as now. She felt her first real hope of reaching the station first. Then a horrible fear crossed her mind. Suppose the freight should pass the station before she reached it, and meet the express which she had just heard! Of course that wasn't likely to happen unless the express had lost time, and she knew it must have lost time, else she could never have been able to meet it at the W. station.

She reached the station almost exhausted. The train was passing, but slowly, for some reason, as it never stopped at W. Eunice sprang from her wheel and dashed after the train. She never could afterward tell just how she managed to climb the steps without being thrown off beneath the wheels, but she did climb them, passed under the iron gate, opened the door of the passenger car, climbed on a vacant seat, and violently jerked the bell-cord. Then, for the first time, her nervous energy, strained to its utmost, gave way, and weak and trembling she sank down on the seat and pressed both hands over her fast-beating heart.

There were but few passengers in this car, as this was a night train and most of the passengers occupied the sleepers just back, but such as were fully awake looked about to see what the unusual commotion meant.

The conductor, who sat a few seats in front of her counting his tickets, had glanced about in time to see what Eunice had done.

"What's the matter?" he exclaimed in alarm, going toward her. With panting breath she told him to side-track the train quick, than her head fell back and she gasped for breath. "See to that girl there, somebody—quick!" he thundered out, rushing out through the front end of the car.

Very shortly afterward the train began to go back for some quarter of a mile, then moved forward on a side track—saved! Two minutes after, the freight dashed by.

In the meantime the conductor had been talking to Eunice, who was now able to talk a little. In answer to her questions he told her his train had been delayed seven minutes through slacking its speed near a dangerous washout three or four miles back, which was why she had been able to catch it. She afterward also learned that the freight had been delayed eleven minutes because of a hot box. Consequently, had it not been for her, the two trains would have met between one and two miles west of W., on the curve, in which a frightful accident must have occured.

The conductor gave orders to have the train brought back on the main track and await his return; then he conducted Eunice to a friend of his near by, where he ordered an interal application of "something hot" and an external of "something dry."

"And now," he said, on leaving, "I'll telegraph to your father the whole thing as soon as I reach H., and I guess it won't be long before he'll be here after you. I'd have some one take you home, but you'll have to get rested and dried anyway, and in the meantime your father can be coming for you, and you'll see him sooner that way." He was a big fellow, and had a loud, gruff voice, but Eunice saw the tears shining in his eyes as he bade her good-by and added that old No. 3 would never forget her, and that she would see him again before long.

About an hour and a half afterward Eunice sitting by the front window in her hostess's dry clothes, looked out into the bright night and listened keenly for sounds of an approaching team.

At last she heard them, and ran out to the gate. She saw a single carriage with two persons in it; it slowed up before the house, and she heard Robert's voice saying:—

"Do you think this is the house, father?"

"Father! Robert!" called out Eunice.

The carriage stopped, and some one got out. She couldn't see his face, but knew it was her father. He approached her, caught her up like a child in his strong arms, and said in a low, husky voice:—

"Eunice my precious daughter!"—Ida M. Brady, in The Independent.

MORAL SAFETY.

Deacon Lightfoot and Deacon Olmstead were brother officers in the same colored church in a Kentucky town, and while the former was fond of slipping around a smoke-house in the night time, the latter had a hankering for chicken coops. One day they met on the street.

"Look a heah, Brer Olmstead," said Lightfoot warningly, "you is got ter be mo' keerful how you fool around dem hen coops, you is."

Deacon Olmstead was greatly shocked.

"Whaffur you talk like dat ter me, Brer Lightfoot," he responded. "I spec' taint no wussen stealin' meat."

"Huh," said the other; "you doan know what you talkin' about. Ef you steal a chicken, de chicken's gwinter holler an' you is gwinter git shot an' bring reproach on de church, but who ebber heah a ham holler?" and with this knockout argument Brer Lightfoot passed on.—Detroit Free Press.

"Papa!" cried little Willie, as the clock indicated three in the morning. No answer. "Papa!" cried Willie again and again and again. Finally papa got up and walked into the nursery, rubbing the sleep out of his eyes. "Well, what on earth do you want at this hour of the night?" he said. "Well, papa, said Willie, sitting up in bed, "if Grover Cleveland's first name was Jimmie, what would his last name be?"—Harper's Bazar.

WOMAN'S CORNER.

THROUGH DIM EYES.

Is it the world, or my eyes, that are sadder?
I see not the grace that I used to see
In the meadow-brook whose song was so glad, or
In the boughs of the willow tree.
The brook runs slower—its song seems lower,
And not the song that it sang of old;
And the tree I admired looks weary and tired
Of the changeless story of heat and cold.

When the sun goes up, and the stars go under,
In that supreme hour of the breaking day,
Is it my eyes, or the dawn I wonder,
That finds less of the gold and more of the gray?
I see not the splendor, the tints so tender,
The rose-hued glory I used to see;
And I often borrow a vague half-sorrow
That another morning has dawned for me.

When the royal smile of that welcome comer
Beams on the meadow and burns in the sky,
Is it my eyes, or does the summer
Bring less of bloom than in days gone by?
The beauty that thrilled me, the rapture that filled me,
To an overflowing of happy tears,
I pass unseeing, my sad eyes being
Dimmed by the shadow of vanished years.

When the heart grows weary, all things seem dreary;
When the burden grows heavy, the way seems long;
Thank God for sending kind death as an ending,
Like a grand Amen to a minor song.

MAKING THE HOME ATTRACTIVE.

The quality of good furnishing is like that of a fine picture, a true and complete exhibition of noble human feeling realized in the proper selection of various pieces of furniture, and not a mere aggregation of ill-edited furnishings, whose effect is quite the opposite of all that is rich and delicate in one's surroundings. The trouble is that many persons simply furnish their homes at haphazard, the result of external dictation alone—of ideas that are in no sense a part of the people themselves. The true art of furnishing is first to discover what things are really necessary for the convenience and comfort of the occupants of the house, and then by a knowledge of what is proper in design and color.

The cheapest thing for portieres is denim. This has been used for some time past, but in place of the old-fashioned denim, which was of light blue on one side and dark on the other, has come a shaded variety of deep, warm shades of blue and red. This is especially suitable for hangings. In making portieres of this allow two widths for each curtain, and cut them 14 inches longer than you desire when completed. After seaming the two lengths together press the seam carefully and reverse it 10 inches from the upper end and four from the lower to allow for hems. From plain denim cut two bands for each curtain 15 inches wide; turn the curtain, both top and bottom, and baste the bands in place, having the lighter side out. After it is stiched in place paint on both borders nasturtions, poppies, or chrysanthemums. When finished you will have very effective hangings as well as inexpensive ones.

FRIDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 29, 1893.

SENATOR PEFFER has offered a bill providing for the appropriation of $65,000,000 by the United States government for the relief of the unemployed.

WILLIAM E. GLADSTONE is celebrating his 84th birthday to-day by fulfilling his duties as head of the British government and leader of the House of Commons.

THE New York and New England railroad, which has had a precarious existence for years, with varied fortunes, has passed into the hands of a temporary receiver, ex-Senator Thomas C. Platt of New York.

THE contest for the speakership of the next House of Representatives in Massachusetts is narrowed a little by the withdrawal of Frank P. Bennett, who does not seem to be having any better luck now than when he tried to defeat Mr. Barrett.

THE whole herd of 60 fine cattle at the Amherst Agricultural College is being killed in an attempt to get rid of tuberculosis, which has been in the barns for years and defied all efforts to eradicate it. Hence all the old stock is to be killed and a new start made.

SPEAKER CRISP of the national House says that the Democratic majority of the House ought to pass the tariff bill by the last of January. Let us hope so. Whatever the bill may have in store for the country, the sooner the matter is settled, one way or the other, the better.

ONE man of Sam Jones's kind is enough for any country, and some of his methods and sayings may well be questioned. This was evidently the thought of a negro congregation which the other day had its pastor, who was attempting to imitate the celebrated Sam, arrested for swearing.

MUCH sympathy will be felt throughout the state for General Nathaniel P. Banks, who is apparently nearing the end of life at the age of nearly 78. His brain is becoming diseased, and last Saturday he was found wandering aimlessly about Swampscott, having eluded the attendant who was watching him.

GOVERNOR MITCHELL of Florida has an opportunity to win a good name for himself and the lasting gratitude of thousands of people in all parts of the country by effectually interfering in the proposed prize fight between Corbett and Mitchell next month. He says he will do it, but the managers openly defy him.

AFTER next Monday the Louisiana lottery will be illegal in that state, but unfortunately the country will not be wholly rid of it, for it proposes to move to some part of Central America, with an office in Florida, and will find fools in all sections. Although the mails are forbidden the company, they are still used, though the principal method of transporting its literature is through the express companies. Legislation by Congress to prevent this should be undertaken.

A FEW weeks ago a steamer from Cuba to New York was burned at sea, the fire starting from an explosion in the hold, probably of dynamite placed in sacks of coffee which were invoiced for more than their value, the object being to get the insurance, and last Saturday a similar explosion occured in the hold of another steamer of the same line, though the vessel was taken into port and sunk to put the fire out. Dynamite was found in another vessel of the line, the stuff having failed to explode as evidently intended. No punishment is too severe for those who would thus mercenarily endanger the lives of others while at sea.

AGAIN the courts have stepped in to protect travelers on the railroads from inconvenience and danger resulting from strikes, Judge Caldwell of the United States circuit court at St. Paul having issued an injunction commanding all persons, associations, and combinations, whether employes of the Northern Pacific road or not, to absolutely refrain from interfering in any way with the property of the road, and not to interfere by threats or otherwise with men who wish to continue in the employ of the road, nor to obstruct in any way the operation of the road or the telegraph lines along it, and in no way to inconvenience passengers.

CONGRESS is asked to appropriate $1,000,000 for the extermination of the Russian thistle in the Dakotas, Nebraska, Iowa, Minnesota, and Northern Wisconsin, which gained a foothold in North Dakota a short time ago, being brought in the seed grain of some Muscovite immigrants. If the stories told of it are true the extinction will be cheap at almost any price. It is said to grow to "the size of a sod cabin," shades surrounding crops and monopolizes the moisture and nutrition of the soil, and scatters its seeds far and wide. The prickles are so tough and poisonous that men are compelled to wear sheet iron bootlegs in passing through fields of it. In Siberia the plant has driven agriculture from large tracts of land.

The report of the grand jury was made last Friday, and the Boston and Albany road gets off pretty easy in the matter of the Chester disaster. The report is:—

The grand jury of said county having heard and carefully considered the evidence relating to the disaster on the Boston and Albany railroad at Chester on the 31st day of August, last, report that, while in their judgment, the railroad company was guilty of a neglect of duty in its failure to employ a competent engineer to overseer the work on the bridge during such time as its prosecution was liable to endanger the safety of passengers on said company's trains, and the superintendent employed by R. F. Hawkins in making the repairs on the bridge neglected to properly instruct the foreman who had the immediate charge of the work, upon all the evidence we are unable to find that any person directly or indirectly connected with the work on the bridge were guilty either of criminal carelessness or criminal negligence.

The directors of the road may feel very thankful that they are not called to account in the matter.

WAS HE TRYING TO KILL HER?

Some Startling Disclosures in the Case Against Mr. Fuller for Not Supporting His Wife.

Timothy F. Fuller, employed at the freight office of the New London Northern road, was before the district court last Saturday morning, charged with neglecting to properly provide for his wife, and the evidence disclosed a wretched condition of affairs in the Fuller household. Mrs. Fuller stated to the court that for a long time she had not had the necessaries of life in the house; had not had milk for three months, did once have a pint a day for six days, but the bill amounted to 15 cents and Fuller declared he wouldn't pay for any more, and didn't; there had been no butter for three or four months; no flour in the house since February; no tea for two years; no sugar since September; there was molasses, but she didn't like it: the last time fresh meat came into the house was so long ago she could not remember when it was; there was occasionally sausage, tripe, salt pork and corned beef, but she was not particularly fond of such; wood was furnished, but she had to split it, Fuller splitting only what he used in his stove; had asked for butter once, but Fuller declined to furnish it, and when she threatened to complain to the authorities Fuller told her if she did he would split her d——d head open, it would be the last step she would ever take; the carpets in the house had been taken up, and the crockery and other things taken away until there was hardly enough left to keep house with; on the 16th she was taken sick from the effects of splitting wood out of doors, but when sick Fuller would not speak to or care for her; on one occasion while sick she asked for some camphor which was in the house, but was not allowed to have it; while sick no suitable food was furnished by Fuller; they had baker's bread and doughnuts, but they did not agree with her; there was baker's bread in the house when she was sick, from which toast might have been made, but no butter or milk to go with it; Fuller told her he lived and worked hard on the same food that she had, and guessed she could exist while staying at home and doing nothing, but in looking about his room she found in his rubber boots some chipped beef and some cheese, none of which had been offered her and the existence of which she had not known; Fuller had furnished her no clothing but two aprons, while he had abundance for himself; Fuller had told her his wages were $10 per week, and she thought she ought to have more for the money. Mr. Fuller stated that his wages were $10 a week, but that he was compelled to pay $5 a week on a debt incurred while speculating in stocks last year, and that he had been obliged to send his things away to keep even. That Mrs. Fuller has had a hard time there is no doubt. The neighbors have kept her supplied with food and cared for her for some time, or her sufferings would have been something terrible, and she would have been compelled to apply to the town for aid.

And all the trouble results from the "woman in the case." Mr. Fuller was first married about 43 years ago, and the morning after the ceremony the couple separated. When asked the cause Mrs. Fuller replied "Tim Fuller knows, and I know, and God knows, and that is all that ever will know," and although both have lived in town from then till now the reason has never been disclosed. Mr. Fuller's second and third wives died, and after his last bereavement he engaged as housekeeper a Miss Celia Doliver. After a while he concluded to marry again, and with the assistance of a mutual acquaintance was introduced to the present Mrs. Fuller, whom he married at Black River, N. Y., on the 2d of May, 1890. The morning after their marriage Mrs. Fuller gave her husband $108, not a cent of which has she seen since, though he told her he would leave his property in Palmer to her and his son, by a former marriage, now in the school for feeble minded at Waltham. The Doliver woman was not at the Fuller house when the couple arrived in Palmer, and did not appear for some time, but finally came there, and then trouble commenced for Mrs. Fuller. She was ordered about in her own house, neglected, and even struck by the Doliver woman. Mr. Fuller was complained to, but said he didn't care. Finally Mrs. Fuller's apartments were moved up stairs, while the others occupied the rooms below. One night Mrs. Fuller, coming down stairs unexpectedly, found her husband and the Doliver woman in a compromising position, and Oct. 3d, 1892, the pair were brought into court on a charge of adultery. Fuller seemed repentant, and begged so hard to be let off that the case was placed on file on condition that he have nothing more to do with Doliver; she was to leave town, and he was not even to write to her or receive letters from her. He also gave a deed of his property in trust to C. E. Fish, so that in case his promises were broken the property could be turned over to Mrs. Fuller.

Fuller was fined $10 last Saturday, but appealed. It was suspected that he would go to Boston to see Doliver, and the trains were watched. Sunday morning he took the modoc, and Deputy Sheriff Studley stepped on the next car in the rear. At Boston Fuller accosted a policeman, and after he had gone on Mr. Studley learned that he had inquired the shortest way to a certain street and number in Cambridge. He accordingly went to the police station nearest that point, and securing the assistance of an officer in citizen's clothes went to the house, where Fuller and the Doliver woman were found. They were brought back to Palmer and spent Christmas in the lockup. Tuesday they were held in $400 each on the old case, a brother-in-law of Doliver, from Waltham, going bail for both. He is endeavoring to settle the matter with Mrs. Fuller, so as not to have the cases pushed, and professed great surprise at the affair, claiming to be ignorant of the previous arrest of his relative.

The strange infatuation of Fuller for the Doliver woman is something singular. While she kept away he was perfectly contented, having only words of praise for his wife, and telling the neighbors what a treasure he had found and how pleasant she made his home for him. But immediately on her arrival in the family his behavior underwent a quick change, and his wife was not treated decently. On one occasion he introduced the Dolivar woman as his wife to persons he met on the street. Mrs. Fuller is said to desire a divorce, and will be unlikely to compromise the matter, which will come up for a hearing Jan. 6.

Annual Meeting of the Congregational Church.

The annual meeting of the Congregational church was held in the vestry last evening, and was more fully attended than usual, a large number answering to the roll call. The report of the clerk showed that the loss and gain had been equal, 16 each. The treasurer's report was deferred one week. The superintendent of the Sunday school announced a gain in membership of 68, and a gain of about 100 per cent in the average attendance; the collections have been $130, and there is $42 in the treasury. Several new suggestions were made by the pastor in his message, and acting on them the church voted to adopt the creed of the Congregational council of 1883 in place of the one now in use; to adopt a home department in connection with the Sunday school, and to have a superintendent for this and the primary departments; to take steps to incorporate the church, L. E. Moore, H. G. Loomis and Dr. C. W. Cross being appointed a committee to attend to the matter; several changes in the church rules were also made, and the use of the calendars for the Sunday services will be continued through the year. The following officers and committees were elected: Clerk, O. P. Allen; treasurer, J. H. Tuthill; deacon for four years, C. W. Bennett, reëlected; auditor, Henry G. Loomis; superintendent of Sunday school, L. H. Gager; first assistant, J. C. Wing; second assistant, Mrs. H. E. Huntley; superintendent of primary department, Mrs. J. B. Shaw; superintendent of home department, Mrs. W. H. Hitchcock; secretary and treasurer, F. B. Pope; librarian, Miss Julia Allen; organist, Miss Lottie Bray; standing committee of the church, O. P. Allen, J. H. Tuthill, Dr. G. H. Wilkins, Mrs. C. W. Bennett, Mrs. J. H. Kenerson, Mrs. S. C. Hunt; committee to visit strangers and the sick, Mrs. G. H. Wilkins, Mrs. L. M. Burleigh, Mrs. J. B. Shaw, Mrs. S. H. Hellyar, Mrs. Joseph King, Mrs. J. C. Wing, Mrs. G. H. Hastings; committee to welcome strangers, C. W. Bennett, G. H. Hastings, J. B. Shaw; ushers, W. H. Higgins, Jr., S. H. Hellyar, G. H. Bray, L. E. Chandler, Chester Cross, Clarence Wing; committee on decoration, Mrs. J. B. Shaw, Mrs. John Sedgwick, Miss Bessie Moore. An adjourned meeting will be held next Thursday evening.

The Year's Building Record.

The building record of the town for the past year has not been a very large one, yet something has been done. The largest piece of work has been the Palmer and Monson Electric Co's. plant at Blanchardville, which, although begun last season was finished this, the cost being about $45,000. Next come the alterations in the Hampden Hat Mills property necessary for its occupancy by the Rogers-Osgood Hat Company, costing about $5000. The new Masonic quarters are next on the list, costing $3000. Then follow the houses of E. H. Truesdell on West Main street, $4000, and that of Mrs. Atkins on Park street, $2000. F. L. Pierce has built a barn costing $600 and C. A. Brown & Co. a shop costing $400. Mrs. Mary Connor, John Foster and Mrs. S. M. Hunt have made alterations in their residences, costing from $200 to $500.

At Palmer Center John Newman has made additons to his property costing $300.

At Thorndike a new house has been built for Agent Hobbs of the Thorndike Company at a cost of $10,000, and E. N. Hale has built a hall and made changes costing $2500.

At Three Rivers the Palmer Mill has done repairing to the extent of $5000; F. C. Powell has built a house costing $2000, and Mr. Hecox one for $1500. Mrs. Dunn has built a store costing $600, J. F. Hartnett one costing $400, and T. Russell one for $200. Shaw Bros. have expended $600 in repairs, and repairs on the Howard block and at St. Anne's parsonage have cost $150 each.

At Bondsville the record is: Boston Duck Co., five-tenement house, $3300; Lawrence Sullivan, two-tenement house, $2000; M. Sullivan, Liberty Hall, $3200; J. B. Carmody, block, $2800; David Fitzgerald, house, $1500; Jerry Carmody, house, $1300; Timothy Shea, house, $1100; Thomas Lacroix, house, $1550; J. McKelliget, house, $1100; Patrick Key, house, $1500; O. A. Parent, remodeling, $900; C. Collis, repairs, $250; Warren Bond, addition, $200; C. L. Holden, storehouse, $300; Dennis Fenton, repairs, $500.

Death of Rev. Charles P. Grosvenor.

Rev. Charles P. Grosvenor died at the home of his son, C. F. Grosvenor, on Main street, Saturday, at the age of 89 years. Mr. Grosvenor was born in Pomfret, Ct., August 12, 1804. He was educated at Rome, N. Y., Amherst College and at Yale, being a graduate of the latter institution, class of 1827, in which were many men who have since become famous in all sections of the country. After graduating from Andover Theological Seminary he spent a year or two in the West, organizing Sunday schools, and was then Sunday school agent for the state of Connecticut. He then preached in Waterford, Mass., and Kingston, R. I., and since has been settled at Scituate, R. I. Rehoboth and Stoneham, Mass., and Canterbury, West Woodstock and Ashford, Ct. Failing eyesight compelled him to give up preaching about a dozen years ago, since which he has lived with a sister in Pomfret, Ct., until October 10th, when he came to Palmer. In May, 1892, he had an attack of illness from which he never recovered, and has since required constant personal attendance. Beside the son here he leaves a daughter in Providence, a member of the Episcopal sisterhood of the Holy Nativity. The funeral was at Pomfret Monday afternoon. Mr. Grosvenor was an ardent and active abolitionist, and was well posted as to the stations and agencies of the underground railway, engaged in helping slaves to escape to the north. During the Dorr war in Rhode Island he was once called upon by the commander-in-chief of the state forces to act as messenger one dark night. He was a member of the Christian Commission, and spent one winter in the service during the civil war. Mr. Grosvenor had a wide acquaintance throughout Connecticut and the eastern part of Massachusetts, and his son is in daily receipt of letters from friends attesting the worth of his father's character and service.

How the Churches Observed Christmas.

The Christmas decorations at the churches last Sunday were elaborate and tasteful. At the Congregational church the platform was decorated with evergreen, and with holly and mistletoe sent by the church at New Decatur, Ala., of which Rev. Mr. Jenkins was pastor before coming here. Over the front of the platform was a large arch of evergreen, on which were the words, in silver letters, "Ages of Silence Ended." Along the top of the arch and at other points in the decorations were electric lights, which were turned on at a certain point in the concert exercise in the evening. There was no Christmas tree, but on Monday evening the children of the Sunday school were given a supper in the vestry, and afterward amused by an entertainment.

At St. Thomas's Catholic church the reredos was covered with silver, while the altar was elaborately trimmed with cut flowers and lights. The Christmas music, under the direction of Miss Brown, was unusually fine. Each child in the congregation received a present of candy and oranges.

At St. Paul's Universalist church the decorations were of evergreen and plants, and in the evening a large arch of evergreen, bearing the words "Merry Christmas" in white letters occupied the platform. There was a pleasing Sunday school concert in the evening, and Monday evening the children gathered to strip a well-laden Christmas tree of its load.

At the Baptist church a large Christmas tree stood on either side of the pulpit platform, while decorations of evergreen were profuse. An orchestra furnished music for the morning service, and at the concert in the evening electric lights were used to good advantage among the decorations. Monday evening the two large trees were filled with presents for the children of the Sunday school and their parents.

Mrs. Clara B. Ellis and son are visiting friends in Boston.

V. H. Woolrich is home from Norwalk, O., for the holidays.

G. W. Cross will leave the employ of the JOURNAL to-morrow to accept a position in one of the boot shops at North Brookfield.

Fred Royce has taken the position of checker at the New London Northern freight house, recently held by T. F. Fuller.

The weather bureau announces a cold wave this afternoon, which means a drop of 20° in the temperature before 8 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The prevalence of the grippe in this village is something surprising, and it is a fortunate family in which there is not one or more cases.

The employes at the Converse House presented Landlord Pierce and wife with a handsome silver tilting ice pitcher and goblet Christmas.

Mrs. O. F. Benedict of Glendale thinks the record made by her poultry is a hard one to beat. She has 55 pullets, and has averaged 34 eggs a day from them.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Whiton entertained a party of a dozen of their relatives at their home on Pleasant street Christmas. Four generations were present.

Friends of Dea. Lyman Dimock, who has been seriously ill for several weeks, will be glad to learn that he is better, and able to be about the house once more.

The Quaboag Literary Circle meets in the library rooms this evening. Rev. Mr. Jenkins will read a paper on the early settlement of Florida and Louisiana.

A home has been found for the baby boy born about three months ago at the town farm, and he will be legally adopted next Wednesday by Springfield parties.

An official from the Warren fire department was in town Monday looking over our fire alarm system, and expressed himself as much pleased with the working of it.

At the Baptist church next Sabbath the pastor will preach a sermon appropriate to the closing of the year. In the evening there will be a sermon, followed by baptism.

One of the sights about town yesterday was a traveling salesman for a commercial house who stood six feet and seven inches tall. He remarked that he should like to meet at least one man whom he could look up to.

H. B. Downer, a former well-known conductor on the New London Northern road, was stricken with a paralytic shock at his home in New London last Saturday, and is very low, if alive at the present time.

The Central Vermont road has issued a new tariff rate for 24 and 50-trip tickets, the new minimum rate being 7½ cents a trip, instead of 10 cents. This makes a 50-trip ticket between Palmer and Monson $4.50, instead of $5.

There will be a ball at the opera house next Monday evening under the management of J. J. Conway. Messenger's orchestra of Warren will furnish the music. A prize will be given to the best dressed lady in the hall, and one to the homeliest man.

Palmer merchants have little reason to complain at the result of the Christmas trade this year. Of course it was not equal to that of a year ago, and no one expected it to be, but after looking for next to nothing at all the merchants were agreeably surprised by a very good trade.

Good Cheer Rebekah lodge elected these officers Tuesday evening: N. G., Mrs. Clara L. Converse; V. G., Mrs. Anna Moore; R. S., Mrs. Sarah Parkhurst; F. S., Mrs. Nellie Henry; treasurer, Mrs. Georgia Fuller. The other officers are to be appointed, and will be announced at the time of installation, January 9th.

There will be a watch-night meeting at the Baptist church next Sunday evening, with preaching at 9 o'clock by Rev. F. E. Jenkins of the Congregational church, at 10 by Rev. E. C. Weeks of the Baptist church at Three Rivers, and at 11 by the pastor, Rev. S. T. Frost. At 12 there will be a consecration service, led by the pastor.

The will of Miss Louisa Perry, late of Palmer, has been filed for probate. It gives all the household effects of the deceased, which are in her late residence on Pleasant street, to Catharine H. Shumway, a niece, who is also to receive half the remaining property, the other half being left to Sally A. Elmer of Northampton.

Monday evening was the fifteenth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Hellyar, and on Tuesday evening a number of their friends called upon them to celebrate the event. A number of handsome and valuable presents in the line of glassware were left them, and during the evening refreshments carried by the visitors were served.

The service at the Congregational church Sunday evening promises to be an unusually interesting one. It will be under the direction of the Men's Sunday Evening Club, the first of which the club will have entire charge. The service will be a special one, and among other things will be an orchestra of five pieces to assist the organ and choir.

Hampden Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, met Monday evening and elected these officers: H. P., S. H. Hellyar; K., J. J. Helliwell; S., Dr. G. H. Wilkins; treasurer, A. G. Newton; secretary, D. H. Brown; C. H., J. B. Shaw; P. S., F. D. Barton; R. A. C., W. A. Barnes; M. 3d V., Andrew Pinney; M. 2d V., E. C. Sexton; M. 1st V., G. A. Bills; chaplain, George Robinson; tyler, S. W. Shumway.

The young people have been making the most of skating this week, which has been unusually good. The rain and thaw of the first of the week covered the ice with a thin sheet of water, which then froze, making almost ideal skating. And the moonlight nights have helped to swell the crowds on the ponds. Wednesday afternoon a party from this village visited Forest Lake, and last evening another went to the pond at Blanchardville.

The noon expresses between Boston and New York, one of which leaves each city for the other at that hour, are to be taken off, commencing with next Sunday. These trains do not stop at Palmer, but pass here at 2.06 p. m. going west and 3.55 going east. By this arrangement the leaving time of Camp's afternoon accommodation for Springfield will be changed from 2.11 to 1.52, as it will not need to sidetrack to allow the express to pass.

A Thorndike Swede who had invested in a two-quart jug of whiskey last Saturday for his Christmas celebration met a couple of friends on his way home and set the jug down while he conversed with them. Daniel McCarthy had spied the jug and coveted the contents, so he happened along and seizing the jug made off with it, for which he answered to the court yesterday morning, paying the Swede for the ardent and the commonwealth $5 for the violation of the statute.

Although it may not have been generally known, the subscribers of the telephone exchange have been getting an all-day Sunday service since the first of October. The calls have been few, however, and some of the more influential subscribers, feeling that the operator's hours during the week are long enough, have petitioned the management to close the office here on Sundays except the regular Sunday hours, from 9 to 10 a. m. and 5 to 6 p. m., and it is probable that this will soon be done.

At St. Paul's Universalist church next Sunday morning Rev. Mr. Moulton will preach on "The New Year, or the Value of Time." At 6 o'clock the first of a new series of services will be held by the young people, and at 7 there will be a New Year's vesper service, with an address by the pastor on "New Year's Thoughts." The last half hour will be given to the singing of some of the old familiar hymns, accompanied by remarks as to when written and by whom, also some incidents connected with them.

The Baptist Young People's Union has chosen these officers for the coming six months: President, A. S. Campbell; vice president, R. Forest Burr; secretary, Mrs. C. Moulton; treasurer, Miss A. Parkhurst, Anna Spaulding; missionary, Mrs. C. Moulton, Mrs. A. E. Fitch; flower, Mrs. E. Washburn, Frank Tracy.

Probation Officer Merriam is mourning the loss of a pair of warm gloves, ruminating the while on the perverseness of mankind in general and the ungrateful cussedness of tramps in particular. About a year ago Mr. Merriam had one of the fraternity, who claimed to be a barber, sharpen some razors and shears, which was done in a most satisfactory manner, and when the fellow turned up again last week thought he would give him another job. He accordingly took the fellow over to his house and fed him well, then paid him liberally for the work performed, while Mrs. Merriam put him up a well-filled box of food, in return for which the scamp stole a pair of gloves from the table when no one was looking.

State Primary School Notes.

Miss Minnie Moore is away on a vacation.

Miss Cederroth spent Sunday with friends in Providence, R. I.

Miss Richardson spent Christmas at her home in Gilbertville.

E. G. Ward was confined to his room by illness the first of the week.

Mrs. E. G. Buss is staying in Palmer with her daughter, Mrs. Parkhurst, whose son is sick with the scarlet fever.

Patrick Murphy and William Thompson of Palmer have completed the building of the stone wall which incloses the barnyard. The wall is eight rods long, eight feet high and four feet wide, and makes a fine impression with those who appreciate a good job.

Christmas Day was thoroughly enjoyed by the children. Besides the usual gifts, several persons in the neighboring towns interested in their welfare sent boxes of goods which added much to their happiness. Miss Wood, superintendent of schools at Monson, sent a box of books, nuts, and other articles which were contributed by the children of Miss Cantwell's school. Another box of books and toys was received from Rev. F. J. Hale, from the Junior Epworth League of the Methodist church at Bondsville. Saturday evening the officers called upon Superintendent Walter A. Wheeler and wife and presented them with a handsome writing desk and chair. Frank U. Wetmore made the presentation with the following remarks:

Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler:—We are glad to meet with you this evening. For more than a year we have labored together in the interests of those whom the state has entrusted to our care. Many times, we feel, have your minds been especially burdened with this great responsibility, and our earnest desire is that you may be encouraged and strengthened by that power and love which He, who holdeth the waters in the hollow of his hand, alone can give. As we have met this evening to extend our best wishes, so may the same harmonious spirit predominate throughout the new year upon which we are soon to enter, and all succeeding years in whatever place our lot may be cast; and in behalf of the officers of this institution I now present you with this writing desk and chair, which we trust will be useful to you while you are engaged in the discharge of your official duties, and in after years remind you of your friends and officers at the state primary school, who on the evening of the 23d of December, 1893, called upon you to extend their wishes for a Happy Christmas.

Next Sunday Mrs. Clara Hamilton Reed of Brookfield is to address the Sunday school of the Union church, and promotion exercises by two of the intermediate classes will be held on that occasion. Some of the primary classes will also be promoted to the intermediate ranks. The intermediates who are to receive promotion will be presented with diplomas and Bibles, which are provided for them by the kindness of the superintendent, F. A. Upham.

At the meeting of the A. O. U. W. Tuesday evening the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Master, H. R. Paine; foreman, E. F. Shaw; overseer, P. A. Forte; recorder, P. S. Gauthier; financier, John Wilson; receiver, J. H. Trickett; inside watchman, William Kuss; outside watchman, Dr. Bliss; trustee for three years, F. A. Upham. The order will hold the usual meeting on the 23d of January, when the above officers will be installed.

A number of those interested in skating met on Wednesday evening and organized the proposed skating club. The following officers were elected: President, J. W. Cheney; director, Mr. Barnard; secretary and treasurer, Fred Hillman. The following committee was also elected to attend to the interests of the rink: S. P. Barnes, Frank Lavene, A. W. Twogood, Richard Twiss and Dr. Bliss. About $50 has been contributed toward the movement, and an electric light is ordered for three months, to be suspended over the river somewhere convenient to the station of the New London Northern road. The persons who have initiated this measure have unanimously agreed that the rink will be open to everyone who wishes to skate there, but also unanimously request that the public will sustain the vote that no skating take place on Sabbath days.

The Christmas tree exercises in the Union church on Monday evening were very enjoyable. Two large trees were loaded with useful and valuable presents, which were distributed among the numerous smiling faces that filled the church. Among the valuable presents were Josephus' history, and another work, consisting of six volumes, given to F. A. Upham, superintendent of the Sunday school, by the classes, a beautiful parallel Bible to Mr. Butler, the pastor, and a very pretty violin case and music stand to R. C. Newell by his class of young men. Some good singing was rendered by the choir, and several Christmas selections were read by Mrs. Wright and Miss Louise White. Many good wishes were wafted from thankful lips, and the sunny faces of all indicated genuine Christmas satisfaction.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

LOCAL NOTICES.

W. N. Flynt & Sons have arranged with an overstocked house for a cloak sale at their store next Wednesday and Thursday, when the people of Monson will be given an opportunity to select from a large variety of stylish goods. Sacrifice prices will prevail.

MONSON'S FIRE LOSS IN 1893.

A Large Amount of Property Goes Up in Smoke, But it was Well Insured.

Monson has been peculiarly unfortunate during the past year in regard to fires. There have not been a large number, but those which have come have been particularly disastrous, the worst two destroying one of the mills of the town and the largest business block. The total loss foots up over a hundred thousand dollars, but fortunately the insurance carried was well along toward this sum, and the net loss is not so great as it might have been. A history of the fires, with a schedule of the losses and insurance, follows: February 1st, personal property owned by Mrs. L. Elizabeth Aldrich, damage $108.70, insurance 108.70. August 11th, tenement house on the Green owned by R. M. & T. Reynolds, damage to building $300, insurance $300; damage to personal property $700, insurance $400. August 17th, mill at North Monson owned by Monson Woolen Co., loss on building $16,000, insurance $15,500; loss on personal property $51,000, insurance $37,000. November 13th, Central Block, owned by Norcross & Reynolds, loss on block $23,500, insurance $18,000; loss on personal property, $18,175, insurance $10,400; barn loss $300, insurance $200; personal property $100; damage to house $20, insurance $20; storehouse loss $300; personal property $560, insurance $500; boarding house owned by Heimann & Lichten, damage to building $3000, insurance $3000; personal property $525, insurance $325; damage to dwelling house of S. F. Cushman $185, insurance $185; damage to dwelling house of S. F. Cushman, Jr., $195 50, insurance $195; personal property $23, insurance $23; stove and tin shop owned by C. J. Leary, loss $600; insurance $400; personal property $1550, insurance $1100; engine house owned by the town, loss $150; damage to cemetery $2000. This makes a total loss on buildings of $44,550 50, with insurance of $37,800.50; loss on personal property $74,741.70, with insurance of $63,956.70; total loss, $119,292 20; total insurance $87,756.70.

The Congregational Church's Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Congregational church was held in the church parlors last evening. After a social time and supper together the roll of the church members was called, about 100 responding. The treasurer's report showed a wide distribution of contributions of the church and Sunday school, the total amounting to not far from $1000. The report of the Sunday school superintendent and librarian suggested needed improvements in the Sunday school methods and appliances. The clerk's report showed the smallest loss by death for many years. Twelve have been added to the church during the year. The report of the pastor surveyed the general work of the church for the year in all of its varied activities, and recommended specific improvements, which recommendations were adopted. These related to out-district work, the home department, and the training of the youth of the congregation in music. The following officers were elected: Deacon, E. F. Morris; church committee, Rev. James Tufts, E. M. Walker, J. W. Hall, F. E. Morris, Mrs. W. K. Flynt, Miss Mabel L. Anderson; clerk, Mrs. C. C. Keep; treasurer, E. F. Morris; auditor, Dr. P. W. Soule; Sunday school superintendent, E. F. Morris; assistant, C. C. Keep; assistant in charge of primary department, Mrs. Charles Carpenter; assistant in charge of home department, Miss L. H. Walker; secretary, Lyman K. Flynt; librarian, Fred Rogers. Meeting adjourned until next Thursday evening.

R. Clifford Millar has the grippe.

The schools begin again next Monday.

Contractor Rafftery of New London has been the guest of his daughter, Mrs. John Leahy, this week.

The lecture on "American Citizenship" by Rev. F. J. Conaty of Worcester last evening was much enjoyed.

Miss Esther R. Holmes and Miss Mabelle Anderson are to entertain the Young Ladies' Whist Club next Tuesday evening.

The families of the Moulton Hill and Childs districts had a Christmas tree at the Moulton Hill schoolhouse Monday.

Miss Kate and Master Ralph Howe of Northampton are spending a few days with their grandmother, Mrs. Catherine Smith.

The Sunday school concerts at the Universalist and Congregational churches Sunday evening were well attended and much enjoyed.

A. W. Merchant and A. D. King are home from the Worcester Polytechnic school spending the holidays. They return next Wednesday.

Mrs. Kate Chamberlin of Willimantic, Ct., is the guest of Miss E. R. Holmes. Mrs. Chamberlain is to spend the winter with Miss Holmes.

A watch meeting will be observed at the M. E. church Sunday evening. The services at the Congregational church Sunday will be appropriate to the closing year.

The W. N. Flynt Granite Co. has recently purchased a herd of registered Durham cattle, also a flock of sheep. The company has a large farm in connection with its quarry, and has recently built a model barn. It is understood that the company will run the farm to supply cream for the Monson Creamery.

Dr. G. E. Fuller had in consultation Dr. Chapin of Springfield in the case of J. D. Dewar of North Main street Thursday evening. Mr. Dewar has been ill for the past two months, and upon feeling better some three weeks ago took a trip to Canada, but on returning suffered a relapse and has been a very sick man since. He is feeling better to-day.

The Christmas decorations at the Congregational church were quite elaborate. The choir rail was hung with branches of holly, and on the platform, which was a bank of hemlock, were palms, ferns and begonias, and several jardinieres of pinks and roses. On the organ was a star of laurel. At the Methodist church the decorations were more simple, but very pretty. Against the pulpit were massed geraniums and other growing plants.

John Burgess Weeks, who will entertain at the Universalist church next Tuesday evening with the three-act comedy, "Still Water Runs Deep," is well worth hearing. Mr. Weeks impersonates the eight characters in the play, which give ample scope for his capabilities. He was for two years with the Tufts College glee club as reader, and since leaving college has devoted himself to the study of elocution under the best of Boston's teachers. His entertainment is highly spoken of wherever he has been, and Monson people have a rare treat in store for them next Tuesday evening.

On Thursday of last week, in response to the request of the teacher, Miss Joanna V. Cantwell, that each scholar at No. 1 should bring a small quantity of something which would help to make up a dinner, not one out of the forty-six failed to do his or her share, and the result was a great credit to the children. Rice, tea, coffee, sugar, a bushel of potatoes, pie, cake, two bushels of apples, canned fruits, nuts, onions, etc., were on Friday morning divided into basketfuls and distributed among those who had been out of employment for some length of time.

Marcus Keep G. A. R. post and Woman's Relief Corps have a joint installation of officers New Year's night. Mrs. D. S. Davis of Palmer will install the corps officers, and A. A. Gage of Monson the post officers. The exercises will begin at 7.30, and will be followed by a collation and social. The Relief Corps president, Mrs. Susan E. Thrall, has appointed the following committees: Executive, Mrs. Ella S. Howlett, Mrs. Sarah L. Warren, Mrs. Nellie Maguire, Mrs. Juliet Needham, Mrs. Ann Williams; relief, Mrs. Annie J. Hale, Mrs. Martha J. Abbott, Mrs. Flora P. Seymour, Mrs. Mary Cordner, Miss Mary J. Gage; finance, Mrs. Carry L. B. Cross, Miss Mary Fuller, Miss Addie Davis; conference, Miss Lizzie Lull, Mrs. Maria L. Rood, Mrs. Mary A. Gage; entertainment, Miss Lizzie Lull, Mrs. Lillian L. Chapin, Miss Minnie Smith.

The Christmas trees at the Congregational, Universalist and Methodist churches Monday evening called out large numbers of grown people, as well as children. At the Universalist church the entertainment preceding the distribution of gifts consisted of two short farces, speaking and singing. At the Universalist church there was a white arch trimmed with evergreen, bearing the inscriptions, "Peace on Earth" in gilt letters, and "Bethlehem's Star Leads to Christ" in silver, and from which was suspended an evergreen bell. Upon the pulpit platform were many beautiful potted plants, and at each end an evergreen tree. Plants were also banked upon the communion table. At the Catholic church the altar was tastefully trimmed with laural and smilax, and upon it were potted plants of various kinds, while at one side was an evergreen cradle.

Academy Notes.

Everything started off Wednesday without any friction. No recitations were lost in organizing, and one would hardly know that all had just returned from vacation.——There are four new students this term, three from the town and one from South Walpole, Mass. The latter enters the junior middle class, '96.——The librarian, Miss Ada Smith, has resigned, and as yet no successor has been appointed.——There will be a social at the academy this evening, and many of the class of '93 will be in attendance. All of the friends of the academy are invited.

WARREN.

Thomas I. Shuttleworth died at his home in this place Monday night from lung trouble. Mr. Shuttleworth came to Warren a few years ago from Amsterdam, N. Y., and was the inventor of a loom for weaving a double carpet, a process which saved much in the cost of manufacture. Some work has been done here, but a new company had recently been formed to do business in Springfield, and the work incidental to moving the machinery to that city no doubt aggravated the disease. Mr. Shuttleworth was 39 years old, and leaves a wife and four small children.

WEST WARREN.

There are several cases of the grippe about town.

Miss Jennie M. Barton has returned to her home in Millbury.

The "Owls" will give a social dance to-night in Washington Hall.

Miss Estella B. Watts has returned to her home in New London, Conn.

A Christmas sociable was given in the M. E. church Monday evening.

Miss Kate Broshnan is home from the Westfield Normal School for the holidays.

Mrs. Amory Crossman and children spent Christmas with her parents in Springfield.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Shaw and son are spending a few days with Mr. Shaw's father, John Shaw.

Misses Alice and Clara Gilbert are home from the French Protestant College in Springfield for the holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. George A. Barton of Millbury spent Christmas with Mrs. Barton's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Gilbert.

Misses Carrie and Nellie Orcutt of Springfield, Miss Minnie of Worcester, Fred Orcutt and lady of Keene, N. H., spent Christmas here.

WALES.

One case of diphtheria has been reported.

John Ferguson is laid up with the grippe.

Miss Alice Pepper came home to Christmas.

Leon Thompson of Boston spent Christmas in town with particular friends.

The Wales Savings Bank will have its semi-annual meeting next Tuesday at 2.30 p. m.

Mrs. C. Davis, widow of the late C. Davis, has been granted a pension. It came in time for Christmas.

The old Wales mill is being torn down. William Underwood is doing the job, and has the roof nearly off.

A. F. Fisher and Zeno Farrington are on the sick list, having been under the doctor's care for nearly a week.

The mills are doing but little this week, the manufacturers having gone to New York to look over the market. It is hoped they will come back laden with orders for cloth.

The Methodist Sunday school did not hold a Christmas gathering this year, owing to hard times, preferring rather to bestow the gifts among the needy families. While the Baptists held their usual Christmas concert Sunday night, with trees Monday night, presents were few compared with previous years; the decorations of evergreen were about as usual.

BELCHERTOWN.

Rev. F. F. Thayer closes his connection with the Baptist church next Sunday.

Rev. H. G. Alley will probably preach in the West Ware chapel after January 1st.

The ice supply was harvested rapidly last week, as soon as signs of a thaw appeared.

An interesting Christmas concert was given in the Congregational church last Sunday evening.

The attendance at the exhibition of stereopticon views of the World's Fair last Friday night was small.

Miss Maude Fairchild is to leave the store of H. A. Hopkins and go to Norwich, Ct., where her parents are.

Walter R. Blackmer received a handsome Oxford Teachers' Bible as a Christmas gift from the customers on his milk route as a testimonial of his faithful service.

G. C. Allen, cattle inspector for Belchertown, reports that he has found only one suspected case, and that on investigation that proved not to be tuberculosis.

In the superior court at Northampton this week James Laribee of Belchertown was found guilty of felonious assault with intent to ravish Jemima McRea, a 10-years-old girl of Belchertown.

The record at the creamery shows that during October the butter produced was 13,603 pounds, and 92,291 spaces of cream, while 3932 spaces of cream were sold at 4 cents per space.

The Epworth League has chosen these officers: President, Jewel Knight; vice presidents, Grace Moore, E. C. Witt, Flora Gay, Mamie Witt; secretary and treasurer, Bessie Morse.

Rev. W. S. Woolworth of the Congregational church will preach his farewell sermon next Sunday afternoon, and communion will be observed then instead of the first Sunday in January. The preparatory service will be held to-morrow afternoon in the chapel at 1:30, to be followed by the annual business meeting of the church. One deacon is to be chosen this year.

WARE.

The road commissioners are receiving censure on all sides.

Mrs. John Hogan died on Sunday, the funeral being held Tuesday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bohmiller will celebrate their silver wedding Saturday evening at their home on the Gilbertville road.

Perry Cheever has engaged Estes Ruggles, Charles Sumner and Silas Sherman to cut off about eight acres of woodland this winter.

The overseers of the poor report that they are paying about $25 per week more than usual outside the almshouse, where there are 13 inmates.

The Odd Fellows will hold a public installation and social at Masonic Hall next Tuesday evening, to which all Odd Fellows and their families are invited.

Daniel Leary has been given six months by Judge Strickland for making serious disturbance in the house of Martin Cullity at West Ware some weeks ago.

A special meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held next Tuesday afternoon, when Mrs. Ruth B. Baker, county president, will be present, and the annual reports read.

Charles E. Stevens remembered the families of those who have worked for him in a most substantial way at Christmas, the children coming in for their usual gift of candy.

The funeral of John Mott was held in the Methodist church Sunday afternoon and was very largely attended. The G. A. R. were present in a body. Mr. Mott's only son, living at Barre, was too sick to be told of his father's death.

It is expected that work on the iron bridge over the river at Gibbs's crossing will be commenced this week. It is understood that the bridge is all ready but putting up. The flooring is to be of three-inch plank furnished by H. C. Davis.

An orchestra of eight pieces has been formed among the young people of the East Congregational society, to lead the singing at the Christian Endeavor meetings and to furnish music for entertainments at the chapel. M. F. Brown is leader.

Last Sunday evening the services at the East Congregational church, conducted by Rev. A. B. Bassett, consisted of a Christmas responsive service, interspersed by singing led by the male chorus. The addresses were by Prof. Richardson of Princeton University, and Rev. A. B. Bassett.

There was a large Christmas gathering, for that locality, at the schoolhouse in the west part of Hardwick Monday evening. The room was handsomely trimmed with evergreen, and in the corner was a large tree heavily ladened with gifts. Several went up from Ware, this being the place where Sunday school has been held, conducted by members of the East Congregational church of Ware.

The funeral of Bessie I. Ainsworth last Friday afternoon was very largely attended. The services were conducted by Rev. A. B. Bassett, and the singing was of some of Miss Ainsworth's favorite hymns by a select quartette. The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, Woman's Relief Corps, and the class of '89 of the Ware high school were present by representatives, and the floral tributes were many and beautiful.

Miss Ida R. Naylor and Stedman W. Coe, of the firm of Coe & Naylor, were married at the home of the bride on Chestnut street Christmas afternoon, Rev. A. B. Bassett performing the ceremony. There were but few guests outside the immediate families, and the newly-wedded couple repaired at once to their home at No. 12 Spring street, where they have commenced housekeeping with the hearty good wishes of a host of friends.

Mrs. Alva Canterbury was quite badly hurt on Monday evening. She was present at the Christmas entertainment and tree at the school house in district No. 9 in Hardwick, and when about to leave the horse became frightened at the toy drums of the children and overturned the buggy, throwing Mrs. Canterbury violently upon her head. She was taken to the nearest house, where she was attended by a physician, but it was several hours before she regained consciousness. She is now recovering, and it is hoped her injuries will not be permanent.

Christmas passed off very pleasantly, and much the same as usual. The holiday trade seems to have been as good as expected for the hard times. The East Congregational Sunday school had an entertainment and tree at the church on Monday evening; the singing and recitations by the younger members of the school were very good and much enjoyed. The trees were prettily trimmed, and all of the little ones were made happy by receiving presents. The Methodist Sunday school entertainment and tree was a pleasant occasion. The Unitarian Sunday school made a departure from the usual custom, and in place of a tree an open fireplace and chimney was constructed, down which Santa Claus came with his pack of presents.

The roll call meeting of the East Congregational church was a pleasant reunion of the members of the church, although on account of prevailing sickness the meeting was not as large as last year. There were 172 responses by passages of scripture made in person, and a large number who were unable to be present sent in passages to be read when their names were called. After the roll call all joined heartily in singing "Blest be the tie that binds." Then followed the church history for the past year, by the historian, Mrs. Geo. B. Cutler, which was the putting on record of some of the especially helpful sermons preached by the pastor and others, and also the work of the auxiliary societies of the church and the pastor's assistant, resulting in a larger number coming into the church the past year than for many years before. Before the roll call there was a social sitting together, when cake and coffee were served.

A Well-Deserved Verdict.

The case of David Gilligett of Warren, who with W. H. Crawford and William Haley was charged with feloniously assaulting Mary Gould at Ware on the evening of July 1st, came up in the superior court at Northampton Tuesday. Haley, who has been out on bail since the case came up before the district court, was defended by Mayor O'Donnell, but the others had no counsel. Miss Gould, who is a woman grown, and has an impediment in her speech, told the story of the assault in a clear and unmistakable manner and nothing was gained for the defense in the cross-examination. In brief she stated that she was going along the railroad on her way home from her work, when she was followed by Crawford, who wanted to go home with her. This she refused, and then he grasped her by the body and threw her down. The three fellows then attempted to ravish her. She struggled and screamed for help, and Haley finally told the other fellows they had better stop as she was an innocent girl, and that they had better go and hunt up a girl of their own kind. He helped her up, and still calling for help, she managed to get away. The fellows subsequently tried to get out of the scrape by claiming that they meant to do the woman no harm. Mayor O'Donnell argued for Haley, and claimed that he should not be connected. The jury found Gilligett and Crawford guilty of rape, and Haley guilty of simple assault.

W. C. T. U. Anniversary.

Crusade Day, the 20th birthday of the W. C. T. U., was observed by the Ware union last Saturday by a service of prayer, papers on temperance literature, temperance education, and the mission of the W. C. T. U., and addresses by Revs. A. B. Bassett, V. E. Southworth and A. M. Osgood. A most interesting feature of the programme was the exercises by the children of both divisions of the Loyal Temperance Legion, now numbering nearly 100 members. The following paper, under the head of Temperance Literature, was of special interest:—

When the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was established, twenty years ago, it had not one leaflet, tract or book. Now it has millions of pages sent out yearly from its great publishing houses into other lands. The Union Signal and World's White Ribbon, the leading temperance paper, is issued by our own organization, spreading its banner over fifty countries, besides all the special literature to meet the needs of the various phases of the work. Each department — and there are over forty — has its own appropriate literature. At the convention of the World's W. C. T. U. this year the report was made that 20 countries were represented in the department of press work, 500 temperance papers are published, 40 of these being owned or controlled by the unions; 3000 columns are conducted in the interest of the unions in the daily and weekly press, showing the great gain that has been made in public sentiment in this direction. The crowning effort was in securing the introduction of the quarterly temperance lessons in the regular course of the International Sunday school series. It is estimated that 17,000,000 throughout the world are reached by these lessons. In 1882 the first compulsory temperance education law ever enacted was put on the statute books of Vermont. To-day, in 44 states and territories the law says that their 13,000,000 school children shall be taught, as a part of their regular school education, God's law of total abstinence from alcohol and all narcotics, with other laws of health. There are only six states and territories to win before the whole United States and territories will be under compulsory educational laws. Teachers in our public schools are almost universally in sympathy with the effort to introduce the study, but the objection is often made, how can we add that to an already overcrowded programme? The superintendent of schools in a leading city of our own state made a conclusive reply to this objection when he said, "This subject ought to be taught; if the schedule is too crowded, we will take something else out and make room for it, because it is entitled to the right of way." The principal of the Worcester Normal School writes, "No subject in our course receives more careful attention." The principal of the Salem Normal School writes, "Satisfactory examinations in this study are requisite for graduation." Bridgwater, Framingham and Westfield report, "It is made a regular branch of our study." Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, the notional superintendent, has received from the Columbian Exhibition, five highest awards for her exhibit of scientific temperance instruction in the public schools.

Quoting from Miss Willard: "There never were so many intelligent people who could give a scientific reason for their total abstinence faith as now; there were never so many pulpits to come out fearlessly against this great sin; never so many journalists who had a friendly word to say for the temperance reform. The great world brain is becoming saturated with the idea that it is reasonable and kind to let strong drink alone."

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used by millions of mothers for their children while teething. If disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the pain of cutting teeth send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures diarrhœa, regulates the stomache and bowels, cures wind colic, softens the gums and reduces inflamation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Sold by all druggists throughout the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup." 52-9

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN ss. PROBATE COURT.
To the heirs at law, next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of Louisa Perry, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased,
Greeting:
Whereas, a certain instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased has been presented to said court, for probate, by Catherine H. Shumway of said Palmer, who prays that letters testamentary may be issued to her, the executrix therein named, and that she may be exempt from giving a surety on her official bond, as such executrix.
You are hereby cited to appear at a probate court to be held at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the first Wednesday of February next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.
And said petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the Palmer Journal, published at Palmer, the last publication to be two days, at least, before said court, and to mail a copy of such notice to each of said next of kin, fourteen days, at least, before said court.
Witness, WILLIAM S. SHURTLEFF, Esquire, Judge of said court, this twenty-ixth day of December, in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-three.

What Five $1 Bills Accomplished.

This money was invested in five bottles of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. "I suffered for nearly ten years with constipation, jaundice and biliousness," writes Mr. D. Probert, of New Hampton, N. Y., "and the best medical treatment I could procure did me no good. A friend of mine spoke about Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, which I bought, and when I had taken three bottles I was what most people would call a well man, and two bottles more entirely cured me. What the doctors cost me hundreds of dollars in trying to do, Favorite Remedy did for five dollars." If you are inclined to constipation don't neglect yourself. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy permanently cures it.

EPPS'S COCOA

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided for breakfast and supper a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We can escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette. Made simply with boiling water or milk. ## The Human Electrical Forces!

How They Control the Organs of the Body.

The electrical force of the human body, as the nerve fluid may be termed, is an especially attractive department of science, as it exerts so marked an influence on the health of the organs of the body. Nerve force is produced by the brain and conveyed by means of the nerves to the various organs of the body, thus supplying the latter with the vitality necessary to insure their health. The pneumogastric nerve, as shown here, may be said to be the most important of the entire nerve system, as it supplies the heart, lungs, stomach, bowels, etc., with the nerve force necessary to keep them active and healthy. As will be seen by the cut the long nerve descending from the base of the brain and terminating in the bowels is the pneumogastric, while the numerous little branches supply the heart, lungs and stomach with necessary vitality. When the brain becomes in any way disordered by irritability or exhaustion, the nerve force which it supplies is lessened, and the organs receiving the diminished supply are consequently weakened.

Physicians generally fail to recognize the importance of this fact, but treat the organ itself instead of the cause of the trouble. The noted specialist, Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., has given the greater part of his life to the study of this subject, and the principal discoveries concerning it are due to his efforts.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, the unrivaled brain and nerve food, is prepared on the principle that all nervous and many other difficulties originate from disorders of the nerve centers. Its wonderful success in curing these disorders is testified to by thousands in every part of the land.

Restorative Nervine cures sleeplessness, nervous prostration, dizziness, hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs. It is sold on a positive guarantee by all druggists, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

The Sleighride.

Just room for two, not too much room;
I tuck her in all snug and warm;
I'm conscious of her hair's perfume
And of the nearness of her arm.
I shake the lines out free and gay,
The sleigh bells chime and we're away.

Across the crisp and glittering snow,
Leaving behind the city street,
Its garish glare and noise, we go
Into the darkness still and sweet;
And here and there a household gleam
Flits by us in a flying dream.

How speed the horses gaily driven!
The sweet bells clatter silvery mirth,
And every star is white in heaven
And every field is white on earth.
How dark the brightness seems, how bright
The darkness of the winter night!

We pass the open road like wind,
But in the dim and shadowy lanes
Our wild pace slakens, and I find
One hand enough to hold the reins;
And, somehow when I try to speak,
My words are kisses on her cheek.

Ah, life is fair in many ways,
And full of dear, enchanting hours!
And love is sweet in summer days,
'Mid blossoming paths and sylvan bowers;
But let me choose, all bliss above,
A sleighride with the girl I love.

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

UNDER THE MISTLETOE.

She stood beneath the mistletoe,
So exquisitely fair
That all my courage oozed away!
How could I ever dare
To claim the privilege that it gave,
And kiss her rosy lips?
The very notion sent a thrill
Clear to my finger-tips!

And so I hesitated. Fool!
To fear in such a case!
And she? Well she read all my thoughts
With one glance at my face;
For, looking up, with roguish eyes,—
When! how my heart did jump!—
She softly whispered, with a blush:
"Come, Ned, don't be a chump!"

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

In Memoriam.

Oh, dear mother, how I'm longing
To behold your face once more;
But our Heavenly Father 's taken
You across the crystal shore.

Yes, thou art gone and left me lonely,
In this world of grief and pain;
I shall never more behold thee,
Till in glory we shall reign.

Long and sad the separation,
As I tread life's weary maze;
But the morn of resurrection
Will bring us joy and sweetest praise.

Sweetly thou art sleeping, mother,
On the bosom of thy God;
I will try to walk with meekness,
In the path that thou hast trod.

All this world looks sad and dreary,
As I sit and gaze afar;
Only God can heal my sorrow,
He shall be my guiding star.

All the glory of the sunset
Sinks in darkness out of sight,
But in Heaven there is no darkness,—
It will be eternal light.

In that land of light and glory,
Where no sighs or tears are shed,
There His blessing will forever
Rest upon thy crowned head.

Mother, thou art freed from sorrow,
Thou hast laid Life's burden down;
Thou art gone to join the dear ones,
And hast gained thy welcome crown.

Songs of triumph thou art singing,
With the ransomed of the Lord;
Thou hast crossed the shining river,
And art reigning with thy God.

A BROTHER'S LEGACY.

A telegraph messenger ran up the steps of No. 10 ——Place. At his quick rings the door opened, and a young lady took the message. There was but one line, yet it stood out in the morning light with terrible distinctness:

"Your brother, Ralph died this morning at five o'clock."

The color faded from the girl's cheek, and she leaned heavily against the doorway, gazing at the paper as if stricken dumb. The boy waited a moment, then softly touched her arm, saying: "Please ma'm, there's ten cents to pay."

"Yes, I forgot," she said; then mechanically drew out her purse, paid him, and entered the house.

The boy ran down the steps, saying: "I wonder what's the matter?"

What was the matter? Only one line of writing, yet how much it meant. Ralph was dead—Ralph was dead—he, the loved and absent brother, would return no more to the hearts that missed him. Far, far away whither he had gone to win a place for himself, with the dew of youth on his head, he had laid himself down and died.

There was a sound of great weeping in that home, for the terrible shadow of death was there.

Two weeks afterward, the bell rang again, and an expressman carried into the house a trunk marked 'Ralph Gray.' Kind letters had come, telling of the brother's sickness and death, telling also of his life and the honored name he had left. Pleasant words were these to the loved ones; but nothing had made his death so real as the sight of Ralph's trunk without Ralph.

Helen Gray knelt before her brother's trunk, and with trembling hands raised the cover; kind hands had neatly packed the things within, and as Helen took out the folded clothes, still bearing the impress of the wearer, each garment seemed to speak his name. At last, as she opened his desk and saw a few boyish treasures within, a great wave of grief swept over her, and with a burst of tears, she: "O, Ralph, come back, come back!"

Then her tearful gaze rested on a worn little book, half diary and half account book. Opening it, she saw pasted on the first page a newspaper slip containing these words:

"A worthy Quaker thus wrote: 'I expect to pass through this world but once. If therefore, there is any kindness I can show, or any good thing I can do any fellow-being, let me do it now. Let me not defer nor neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again.'"

This, then, had been the motto for the last year of Ralph's earthly life, and the record following showed that it had not been forgotten. The expenses recorded were comparatively few for himself, but a long list of items showed how his small income had gone. There was written down: "A present for my mother. A present for my sister. A donation for the Sunday school. Bought flowers of a poor woman. Books for my class. A Christmas present for my washerwoman. A Christmas present for my landlady. Fifty cents to a poor cripple." And so the generous list went on—a great many of small kindnesses, giving evidence of the noble life Ralph Gray had tried to live.

As Helen closed the little book her tears ceased to flow. Surely, this young life, though brief, had not been in vain. A glow of grateful gladness came over her face, and looking up in heaven, she exclaimed: 'Dear Ralph, this is your best legacy!'

Sorrowful, yet rejoicing, Helen Gray went on her way, holding very precious the name of Ralph, and cherishing in her heart the sacred words from his legacy!

"I expect to pass through this world but once. If therefore, there is any kindness I can show, or any good thing I can do to any fellow-being, let me do it now. Let me not defer nor neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again."

DON'T "FUSS" TOO MUCH WITH THE BABY.

These thoughts on baby nurture are presented by Grace Kempton in the Outlook: A healthy baby will gain by lying unattended for an hour or more at a time. A baby trained by habit to go to sleep unrocked has begun the lesson of quiet in both body and mind. Hands off! we must read on the brow of the well-cared-for child, who, happy in his independence, would fret himself into nervousness had he interfering attendance. Make the baby comfortable in every way, then let it alone, if you want healthy nerves and a good child. Sincere watching of free and normal action will picture it in your mind. Hold to this picture, neither allowing the child to interfere nor interfering yourself. Think of yourself as the remover of obstacles to the child's growth, not as one who would mold at personal will the sensitive and fertile material. Law will do this; you must serve law. Emotional excitement or punishment is an interference, and therefore causes a nervous condition. The feelings of a child wrought to a high pitch over some misdeed, recover with a debt of waste to the beautiful forces of his nature. All the processes applied to a little child should be simple, and planned to be as gentle as possible, and still impress. Not to interfere with the child's body as by the omission of a meal, the influence of fear, of confinement, or other conditions of growth; nor to interfere with the child's trust by impatience, anger, or other unjust retribution, is a first lesson. What wonder a child becomes unquiet if it is shocked by those who should nurture!

The youngest child of a Revolutionary soldier is supposed to be ex-Judge Jeremiah Smith, an instructor in the Harvard Law School. He is fifty-six years old. His father was Judge Jeremiah Smith, of New Hampshire, who was one of the most prominent figures in the early history of that state, and who entered the Revolutionary Army at the age of seventeen. His son was born when he was seventy-eight years old. The present Judge Smith has been a member of the New Hampshire Supreme Court, but resigned on account of ill health in 1874.

JESTING ABOUT MARRIAGE.

In a lecture delivered not long since Dr. Henry Wood Allen, national superintendent of the social purity department of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, says:

All manner of jesting about love, marriage and flirtation do children and young people an incalculable harm. If we only spoke of marriage in the dignified and sacred manner which truly belongs to it, we should find our young people would have high respect for it, and this would influence them in all their manner of conversation and thought regarding it. Then there would be no more "summer girls" who enter into engagements simply for the familiarity which it affords. And, if our young men had proper instruction they would feel that the degredation of womanhood was a degredation of the race. We should teach our young people that they can be free, frank comrades without a thought of sexual or social relations, until their hearts shall teach them truly what love is. If the true dignity and propriety of association as between men and women were understood and observed, the influence for good would be incalculable in the future and the pleasures of the present greatly enhanced. While we are constantly teasing young people in senseless banter about love and marriage, we are very careful not to say anything to them about the real responsibilities and duties of husbands, wives and parents; that which would be the most vital of anything in our lives. We are willing to teach our children everything but the business of life itself. The responsibilities and duties of the man and woman in the home, we leave our children to learn for themselves by experience, and often by sad experience.

Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."
